The American's Offer to Herald and Journal

(From the Boston Herald Today)

Here are a few somewhat confusing statements made by the Boston Journal regarding its own circulation:

"The Boston Journal now has the largest Greater Boston circulation of any morning paper—excepting only the Boston Post."—Boston Journal, Page 1, April 9, 1914.

"Net circulation more than 75,000."—Standing announcement on first page Journal, July 1 to Aug. 16, inclusive, last year.

"Average daily issue six months preceding Oct. 1, 1913, 84,918."—Sworn report of Journal to government Oct. 15th, last year.

"Net circulation more than 75,000."—Journal ad in Fourth Estate, Feb. 14, 1914.

"Average each issue sold or distributed to paid subscribers 46,007."—Sworn report of Journal to government April 1, 1914, for six months preceding that date.

The Herald raises no question regarding the truth of any of the Journal's own circulation figures given above.

The Herald sells every morning vastly more than 46,007 papers in Greater Boston alone. It follows that if the total circulation of the Journal, as shown by its own figures, is 46,007, the Journal's claim to having the second largest morning circulation in Greater Boston is not borne out by the facts as stated by the Journal itself.

ADVERTISERS ARE ENTITLED TO KNOW THE TRUTH

Because the Boston AMERICAN is disinterested—not caring whether the Herald or Journal IS FIRST OR LAST in circulation—this newspaper offers to examine the circulation books and reports of both the Herald and Journal in an impartial way, and publish without cost to either newspaper and in a very conspicuous manner, the TRUE FIGURES of the circulation of both newspapers.

WILL THE HERALD AND JOURNAL ACCEPT?

And the AMERICAN offers the same privilege to the Journal and Herald to examine the American's circulation books and reports if the Journal and Herald will accept the American's offer.

HICHBORN RESISTS OFFICERS

The home of Dr. Herman Everett Hichborn, a well-to-do young Boston dentist living in the exclusive Mystic Valley Parkway section of Winchester, was stormed by a squad of police early today, the rear door was smashed, and the dentist and his attractive twenty-one year old wife were taken to the Winchester police station after the husband had threatened to kill the policemen with what they took to be a revolver.

The police visit was the result of strange noises in the house which aroused wealthy neighbors of the couple. The incident gave the town its greatest sensation in years.

At the station the police learned that young Hichborn, who is the son of Dr. Herman G. Hichborn, of Mt. Vernon street, North Cambridge, was a victim of melancholia. At first it was decided to take him to the Psychopathic Hospital for observation, but later treatment at his father's home was thought sufficient.

CARE FOR BABY.

A year-old baby, the adopted child of the young couple and which lay within a few feet of where the police had made a rush to overcome young Hichborn in his bedroom, was cared for by neighbors until an automobile came to take the baby to the North Cambridge home.

The first of the Winchester police to be sent to the Hichborn house in response to an emergency call were Patrolmen Kelley, O'Connell, Rogers and Harold. Shortly after two other officers and one Metropolitan police officer were sent.

The police tried the doors, and failing to gain admission, mounted a small ladder to a window on the second floor.

Rogers was first. After him crowded the other three—Kelley, O'Connell and Harold. As Rogers pushed up a window, Hichborn appeared, holding out his "revolver" and saying:

"I'll shoot the first man that tries to come in."

Down the ladder went the police. They went around to the rear door and broke it down. Upstairs they opened Hichborn's bedroom door. The baby lay in the next room. In the chamber they saw Hichborn in a corner, clasping his wife who was between him and the officers. On her left shoulder rested Hichborn's hand, clutching his "revolver."

"I'll shoot you if you come nearer," he shouted in defiance at the police.

Then at intervals he would make a strange noise sounding like:

"Whee-e-e, Whoo-o-o—"

POLICE RUSH MAN.

The police parleyed with Hichborn for a few minutes, then made a concerted rush, seized him and took him to the street. Mrs. Hichborn was escorted after him. It was some time afterwards that the police found out the "revolver" was an ancient pistol, out of commission and unloaded.

According to the police young Hichborn appeared to be suffering from an illusion that "somebody wanted to take his wife from him."

A small dog, which had resented the entrance of the police by growls, clattered by barking, trailed them down the stairs.

In the police van the couple were taken to the Winchester station. Several hours later they were taken away in an auto by Hichborn's father and Dr. Eugene A. Darling of Cambridge, who has been treating the son for some time for a nervous disorder. Father and doctor started for the Psychopathic Hospital, but when in Boston changed their minds and took the son back to the North Cambridge home.

Hichborn is twenty-four, and is in business with his father at No. 184 Boylston street, Boston. It was said he would be given a chance to get a long rest in the hope that he would recuperate.

DEAF MUTE IS VICTIM OF CRASH

Humphrey D. Lutes, a deaf and dumb carpenter who was probably fatally hurt in the collapse of a wooden factory wall in Lynn, today, tried pitifully for two hours to let Lynn Hospital surgeons know where and how much he was injured. Ten other men jumped in time to escape the falling wall, but Lutes could not hear it.

The stricken mute moaned incoherently and even made desperate signs with his fingers, as though he sought to convey some meaning to the baffled surgeons through his deaf mute finger alphabet.

Finally two deaf and dumb men, relatives of Lutes, arrived at the hospital in answer to summons from fellow workmen of the injured man.

The two new arrivals talked with Lutes by the finger method, then they wrote for the surgeons what Lute told them in his deaf mute way.

With their own examination aided by this method the surgeons were able to learn that Lutes was injured in the left side of the chest, over the heart. The surgeons fear that he was crushed by the falling timbers and that he will not recover. His name is on the dangerous list.

The wall which fell was part of the new building being erected for the Littlefield & Moulton Box Company on Box place, off Broad street, which was burned out three weeks ago.

The wall was up to the third-story level. Ten men were working on ladders or staging, finishing the building on one end. Lutes was fitting a window frame on the first-floor level. All the men were on the outer side of the wall, which suddenly creaked, then swayed outward and fell to the ground.

At the first creak the ten men on the ladders and staging jumped, shouting at the same time to Lutes. The ripping timbers and boards also made a loud noise, but neither voices nor sounds of breaking wood were loud enough to penetrate the mute's ears.

Lutes is thirty years old and lives at No. 3 Melvin avenue.

Investigation of the collapse was begun by the owners of the property and by George Corney, Commissioner of Public Buildings, who has charge of general building inspection.

Rebels in Hand to Hand Battle Take Part of Tampico

VERA CRUZ, April 10.—A serious shortage of ammunition threatens disaster to the Federals defending Tampico, according to wireless reports received here today. The gunners have been wasting shells ever since the rebel attack began.

Part of the northwestern section of the city has been captured by the rebels after fierce hand-to-hand fighting, but the attack on the east side has been repulsed.

The rescue of imperilled foreigners began late last night when the hearse gale that had been blowing for forty-eight hours subsided. The work continued throughout the night.

"Women and children first," was the order issued by Rear Admiral Mayo, who directed the operations from the Dolphin.

MEXICO CITY, April 10.—Complete defeat of the rebels attacking Tampico, with 500 killed, was announced by the war department at 7.30 a. m. today. General Blanquet later said he had received a dispatch saying the rebels were retreating in disorder to Altamira, with the government soldiers in pursuit.

For other developments in Mexican situation see Page 2.

FUNERAL OF DRAPER MONDAY

Eben Sumner Draper, twice Governor of Massachusetts, is dead, and the State is preparing to honor his memory. Governor Walsh early today began to write a message to the Legislature, giving the House and Senate formal notice of Mr. Draper's death.

The House and Senate will appoint committees to represent the Legislature in plans for the funeral. It is possible the exercises will be public, and that the former Governor's body will lie in State in the State House before interment.

G. Fred Butterworth of Hopedale is representing the family in preliminary plans. George A. Draper, Mr. Draper's brother, started north today from South Carolina to prepare for reception of Mr. Draper's body.

The body is being conveyed from Greenville in a private car. The car will proceed direct to Hopedale, where the funeral, according to present plans, will be held Monday afternoon.

Mr. Draper's end came after an illness of less than three days. He was seized with a paralytic shock, and afterward rallied only slightly. When he died his sons, Bristow and Eben, were at his bedside, with Mrs. Bristow Draper and George Draper. They had hastened to South Carolina at word of the seizure.

Little Wanderers Held for Pa and Ma

Joe and Tony Natoli—aged seven and eight years—left their Endicott street home today, looked about to see that nobody suspected their motive and then walked fast toward Scollay square. A police officer stopped them.

"Where are you going, my little men?" he asked.

"We're going to walk to Italy."

"Well, you're going in the wrong direction. I'll put you right."

So the policeman led them to the City Hall avenue station where officers off duty entertained the lads with piano selections and sleight-of-hand tricks while pa and ma were summoned.

CONTINUE FIGHT FOR REPRIEVE

OSSINING, N. Y., April 10.—The "death watch" was placed today over the four gunmen who are condemned to die on Monday for the assassination of Herman Rosenthal.

At the same time attaches of the warden's office placed in the mail the last of the official invitations to witnesses who will attend the executions.

NEW YORK, April 10.—Former Magistrate C. G. W. Wahle, chief counsel for the four gunmen under sentence to die next week for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, made his final plea to Governor Glynn today for a reprieve for his clients.

A special messenger bearing an affidavit which establishes an alibi for Frank Cirofici, alias "Dago Frank," was dispatched to Albany. The affidavit was made by Frederick Reo, also known as "Pinkie," who swore that he saw Cirofici entering his home in the Bronx on the night that Rosenthal was shot within a few minutes of the time that the tragedy was being enacted, miles away.

Through his legal adviser, John C. Saxe, and James E. Delehanty, an assistant of District Attorney Whitman, the Governor has paved the way for an investigation of a note found in a bundle of old correspondence of B. M. Brown of New York, which may save the lives of the doomed men. The note says:

"Be very careful as to anything given by Loban or Margolis."

This note is said to have been written by a former assistant to District Attorney Whitman. Margolis and Loban were two witnesses at the trial of Louis Rosenberg (Lefty Louis), Harry Horowitz (Gyp the Blood), Jacob Seidenscher (Whitey Lewis) and Frank Cirofici (Dago Frank), and their testimony was part of the evidence that convicted the defendants.

BROWN WILL TELL HIS STORY.

Brown presented the note to Governor Glynn and told him it was originally intended for the guidance of former Governor William Sulzer, in whose behalf, it was reported at the time it was written, Loban would appear as a witness at the former Governor's impeachment trial.

Governor Glynn called in Attorneys Saxe and Delehanty. The latter as a

MASS TROOPS FOR DEFENCE OF MEXICO CITY

MEXICO CITY, April 10.—With rebel victories reported from all points where Constitutionalists have met government troops, and the withdrawal of the Federals from the State of Guerrero, the position of Mexico City is becoming serious today.

Troops are being gathered into the capital from points nearby. Preparations for defence are going on under cover. The number of troops now in the city is scarcely 4,000, and it is reported that the real reason for keeping the fall of Torreon secret was to give the government an opportunity to bring additional forces into the capital.

A Federal loss which is as important strategically in the south as was the fall of Torreon in the north was reported today. This was the evacuation of Guerrero, which Federals originally held Chilpancingo, capital of the state. This city was evacuated, and Iguala was occupied and made the provisional capital. They have now deserted Iguala.

Official notice that the government had established a censorship over all dispatches relating to the movement of Federal troops was sent to all correspondents by Provisional Minister Gamboa today. The newspaper El Pais, which was shut down by direct order recently, was allowed to resume publication today.

REBELS HARD PRESSED AT SAN PEDRO; VILLA SENDS REINFORCEMENTS

JUAREZ, April 10.—General Villa reported by telegraph to Constitutionalist headquarters today that he had sent 2,000 soldiers to reinforce the rebel troops who have been fighting for three days with the united Federal forces at San Pedro de las Colonias.

This action by the Constitutionalist commander indicates that his men at San Pedro are being hard pressed, though he claims that thus far the rebels have had the better of the fighting.

Other reports from Torreon, delayed by the censorship, state that large numbers of wounded rebels are arriving there from the front.

MISS ELEANOR MAY McPHEE, in serious condition at hospital as result of taking corrosive sublimate.

SAY GIRL TRIED TO DIE, LOSING SWEETHEART

It was learned early today that Miss Eleanor May McPhee, the pretty East Boston girl who took corrosive sublimate tablets to end her life, had made a previous attempt at self-destruction some seven weeks ago, when she met with an accident by falling from a street car while on her way home from work in a Boston department store.

This fact was given out today by the woman with whom she has lived for the past three years at No. 109 Bennington street. This woman told a reporter that it was the firm belief of her relatives that the accident was only an attempt made by the pretty girl to kill herself when she was deprived of her sweetheart, who died in the City Hospital eight weeks ago. The two were to have been married early next month, and every preparation had been made for a honeymoon. The young man's name is being withheld by relatives of the girl.

It was also learned today that when Miss McPhee had telephoned to the hospital to inquire about the condition of her sweetheart, she fainted when the news of his death was transmitted to her over the phone. At that time she threatened to do herself bodily harm, but was prevented from so doing by her sister.

Another new phase in the tragedy was brought to light, when it was said that an officer summoned to the house last Wednesday night, had a private talk with the girl concerning her suicidal intentions, but that the officer did not notify the woman with whom she was living. It was at supper time on the same night, that the girl told this woman that she had taken "something" that she thought would kill her and begged her to have her sister come at once to see her.

At the East Boston Relief Station today it was stated that the girl was resting comfortably despite he fact that she had taken enough of the poison to kill two ordinary persons. The girl still insists that she wished she had succeeded in taking her life.

LAVELLE OFF TO BRING MRS. SIEGEL HERE

Assistant District Attorney Thomas D. Lavelle left for New York today to accompany Mrs. Henry Siegel to this city, where she will be a witness Monday at the Grand Jury session in connection with the Suffolk County Grand Jury investigation of Henry Siegel's financial affairs in Boston.

As she has declared she could give evidence to bear out her assertion that Henry Siegel had concealed assets, she is expected to be the principal witness at the hearing, at which Mrs. "Dolly" Eddy-Brown, named by Mrs. Siegel in her suit for divorce, will also be heard.

Ex-Mayor Henry E. Tiepke of Pawtucket, counsel for Mrs. Eddy-Brown, has already guaranteed the appearance of his client here. She is believed to be on her honeymoon in New London, Ct., awaiting the call of District Attorney Pelletier to appear here.

It has been intimated she would also be able to tell something of concealed Siegel assets, but she denied this.

INTERSTATE IS DEFIED AT NEW HAVEN INQUIRY

WASHINGTON, April 10.—The right of the Interstate Commerce Commission to inquire into the affairs of the John L. Billard Company, which is alleged to have financed many of the transactions of the New Haven Railroad, was challenged today at the opening of the inquiry by the commission into the financial affairs of the New Haven Railroad.

Henry V. Whipple, president of the Merchants' National Bank of New Haven, and former treasurer of the Billard Company, the first witness, flatly refused to tell of his relations while an officer of the Billard Company. "I refuse to answer on the advice of counsel," was Mr. Whipple's response to all questions of this character asked him despite the direction of Commissioner McChord, who presided, that he answer. This led to a lengthy wrangle between counsel for the commission and for Mr. Whipple. Henry Stoddard, attorney for Mr. Whipple, objected to the questions on the ground that the information sought concerned personal transactions.

In reply to a request by Attorney Folk of the commission for additional reasons for his stand, Mr. Stoddard said:

"I challenge the right of the Interstate Commerce Commission to inquire into the affairs of the Billard Company. It is a private affair and I have advised my client to refuse to answer questions relating to such matters. Neither this commission or Congress has the power to compel witnesses to answer matters of this character. The Senate resolution goes clearly beyond the powers of Congress."

"Suppose it is shown that the Billiard Company owns the New Haven Railroad millions of dollars, do you think the commission has not the power to inquire into those matters?" asked Lawyer Folk.

"There are other tribunals that can take up these matters," replied Stoddard, "it is purely without the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission to do so."

FORTUNE TO WOMAN A HOAX

A quarter-million-dollar heiress for a day, but now convinced that she had been marked out as a victim by a band of sharpers posing as private detectives, Mrs. Elizabeth E. Welles of No. 230 Huntington avenue is looking for the men who told her that an uncle in California had left a fortune which would be hers for the mere taking.

Mrs. Welles, a successful business woman, yesterday thought that she was heiress to a $250,000 estate in San Francisco. She had been so informed by the alleged private detectives, who asserted that this fortune was left by her uncle, Charles W. Raymond, who died there three years ago.

The only thing lacking was positive proof of her identity, which the private detectives agreed to furnish, with further details of her inheritance, provided that she would reimburse them for their three-year search in locating her.

FOUND NO TRACE OF ESTATE.

Delighted over her great and good fortune, Mrs. Welles permitted the AMERICAN to publish an account of it all, including mention of how her uncle had made his money as a miner on the coast in '49 after leaving his former home in Augusta, Me., a penniless boy. The AMERICAN wired word of the event to the Hearst papers in San Francisco, with the following result:

A city-wide search by the Hearst press in that city failed to reveal the firm of Rush & Smith, the attorneys for the supposed Raymond estate, who the alleged private detectives had asserted had the property in charge. Neither could any record be found of any quarter-million-dollar estate ever being left by a Charles W. Raymond in California.

"And I don't get my fortune of $250,000 at all?" Mrs. Welles asked, when told of this at her place of business today. "Well, I have one consolation, at least. The men who represented themselves to me as private detectives didn't get any money out of me, either. So we are on a level so far as that goes—but I certainly wish that they would show up again."

PLANNED TO MAKE PAYMENT.

Mrs. Welles further said that the men in question had importuned her to pay them in advance for the information they possessed, which would in turn result in her getting her uncle's fortune.

The AMERICAN'S expose of the scheme undoubtedly saved her, as she merely was waiting the return of a friend from New York before making this payment.

MRS. ELIZABETH E. WELLES, whose reported fortune of $250,000 from a California uncle proves to be the fiction of a gang of sharpers.

Lionel Harvard Says American Spirit Leads

"It is a treat to hear American men speak in public and in private of their love for their country," said Lionel de Jersey Harvard, at the dinner of the Harvard and Technology Cosmopolitan Clubs. "Other countries," he continued, "can gain considerable from the patriotic spirit in America."

Edwin D. Mead, referring to Senator Hollis' recent attack on Harvard, said: "Whatever may be said of Harvard, I venture the assertion that no other institution in the world has contributed so many great leaders in the international peace movement as has Harvard College."

MOTHER WEDS IN JAIL, STATE TAKES CHILDREN

Four children of Mrs. Willena French, confined in the Dedham jail, where she was married to Loring French, eighty, a veteran of the Civil War, have been placed in the State's charge, by order of Judge Raymond. They were declared neglected children.

The children are: Edwin, eighteen; Viola, eleven; Sarah, six, and Loring, two. Mrs. French's first husband was also a Civil War veteran, aged seventy.

The family lived in a section of Randolph called Santiago. The children were charged with begging in Randolph and Stoughton. They were found neglected in Stoughton last October, when the mother was arrested and placed on probation, but later surrendered, because, it was charged, she had broken the terms of her parole.

BURGLARS LOOT BILLIARD ROOM SAFE OF $175

Safe robbers got about $175 by wrenching open an old fashioned safe in the pool and billiard rooms of Benjamin Claburn, No. 126 Summer street. The robbery was discovered today.

The same billiard room lost three billiard balls a few days ago and the thief has not been captured. When the room was opened today, the safe was found tipped on its side. The safe had been jimmied off and the money was gone.

The safe stood on the second floor. The front door of the building had not been opened, but the door into the billiard room had been jimmied. Therefore the police believe the robbers hid inside the building before closing time last night.

The robbers escaped by way of an open window and a fire escape leading to a blind alley off Federal street. They left behind them two jimmies and two drills. A mortgage for $4,000, and notes worth $10,000 were untouched. The robbers took only the cash.

The robbery was discovered by Tony Magna and Frank D. Mano, barbers, who have a shop on the same floor, when they arrived to open the shop at 8 o'clock this morning.

The billiard room did not close till after midnight last night.

New York Policemen Observe Good Friday

NEW YORK, April 10.—Hundreds of New York policemen are today observing Good Friday as a holiday as the result of the following order issued last night by Commissioner Woods:

"The coming Friday will be Good Friday and the following day is the Jewish holiday of the Passover. Notify all members of your command that such of them that care to observe the occasion may do so, and that leave of absence will be accorded. Commanding officers are authorized to give a day's leave upon application."

TOOK GIRL'S $30 WHEN SHE FIXED HER STOCKING

Just by being polite and obliging today, Miss Sadie Singer, an "L" ticket seller in the Scollay square subway station, lost the $30 which she had saved up to buy herself a new Easter suit.

With the money safe in her purse, Miss Singer went to work today. Suddenly in the line of subway patrons came the sweet voice of an attractive girl of about nineteen years.

"My stocking is coming down," said the stranger. "May I step into your booth and fix it."

Miss Singer unlatched the door. The girl stepped in and bent over as if to right the stocking.

Meanwhile Miss Singer was busily selling tickets.

"Thank you, EVEN so much," said the strange girl, prorusely.

Well, a few moments later Miss Singer happened to think of her $30 and the Easter suit which she had planned to buy this afternoon. The purse was missing, and Miss Singer asked the police to locate the sweet-voiced thief.

NEW YORK, April 10.—A resolution opposing woman suffrage in this State has been adopted by the Union League Club.

BRAINY HEN PAYS FOR MEAL BY LAYING EGG

Have hens, after all, brains?

Since the hen was discovered "hen" had been a synonym for "idiot." Scientists have pointed out that the hen's head is extremely small, and that there is no room for a brain of any size or real promise.

Nevertheless, a controversy has arisen; and as all of us have had our little experiences with the hen, the AMERICAN is interested to know YOUR opinion. Has a hen brains?

Meanwhile touching evidence that a hen has a head, if not brains, comes from no less a metropolis than Puente, California. Dispatches tell the story:

"E. H. Lane was doing a job of carpentering and painting for the Edison Light & Power Plant, and at lunch time threw scraps of his sandwiches and cake to a soulful-eyed hen which wandered near.

"When he came to leave for home that night he found a large, brown egg in his tool-box. Looking around in surprise, he observed the hen with the soulful eyes regarding him with a look of the most intense gratitude.

"Thus we see what a little act of kindness may sometimes lead to."

GORDON RAPS J. A. SULLIVAN ON FIRE BILL

Isaac Gordon, attorney for the Russell Fire Club, has addressed the following letter to the members of the Legislature on the firemen's two-platoon bill:

"Your attention was called to House Bill No. 2384 by Corporation Counsel John A. Sullivan of Boston, in a letter under date of April 7. With a view to correcting the representations set forth in said letter which appear to me as somewhat misleading, I submit the following information relating to said bill. This bill contains both the initiative and referendum. It is not a violation of these principles, and it does not deal exclusively with financial matters or a financial policy. It has for its main purpose a desire to better the living condition of members of the fire departments in our cities, as well as increasing the efficiency of those departments, and will abolish the most inhuman form of employment engaged in by any class of public servants.

DENIES DISCRIMINATION.

"The discrimination against Boston in Section 5 complained of by Mr. Sullivan will prove hardly worth considering when it is understood that in Boston there are approximately 16,000 registered voters and that 15 per cent. of this number will exceed in actual count the number of signatures required in other cities, although such other cities are required to furnish a petition containing 25 per cent. of its registered voters. Mr. Sullivan contends that Section 5 shows how dangerous this bill is. An ordinary perusal of said section is sufficient to convince any reasonable person what is meant by a "serious conflagration." The section provides that in cities other than Boston a serious conflagration is one in which a general alarm is sounded. It does not require a count of the number of men attending the fire or the number of men off duty. In Boston a serious conflagration is determined by the amount of apparatus responding. While men may be off duty, the apparatus still remains ready for service, and as such piece of apparatus in Boston is scheduled to respond at fires, it is a very simple matter for the commanding officer to determine whether at any fire from any given fire alarm box, 50 per cent. of the apparatus of the city has responded.

FEES $192,137 INCREASE.

"Mr. Sullivan also declares that this bill will increase Boston's expenses nearly $200,000 at once, and inside of five years the increase will be about $750,000 a year. From figures furnished me by the officers in the Boston Fire Department who are in a position to properly compute the number of men required under this bill to fill their companies so as to maintain their efficiency, I find that but 238 men would have to be added, at a cost of $192,137.40 for the first year. There are now 956 permanent men in the Boston Fire Department. The addition of 238 men means that only 25 per cent. of the present force need be added to maintain the present efficiency, and this proportion holds true in all other cities of the Commonwealth. The money required to employ this additional 25 per cent. is the only barrier to giving the firemen in this Commonwealth the right to enjoy the companionship of their families. It is a question of money against the man and cost against right.

"The two-platoon bill is now in effect in many cities in this country, and wherever tried has been found extremely satisfactory. This bill will allow all firemen ten hours at home, two meals at home, undisturbed sleep, attendance at church, provides a working force always awake and energetic, provides a reserve force in case of serious conflagration, brings health and contentment to the men, thereby increasing their efficiency, and permits the men to enjoy the comforts and pleasures of home life. It permits each city to determine the acceptance of the bill for itself, and this, only upon and after petition of a comparatively large number of its own citizens.

"This bill has been endorsed by the Massachusetts Firemen's Association, the Massachusetts Permanent Firemen's Association, the Boston Central Labor Union and the Russell Fire Club of Boston. It is sincerely hoped that you will favor by your voice and vote the passage of one of the most humane measures presented to the Massachusetts Legislature.

MRS. STINESS PLANS TO WED ONCE MORE

PARIS, April 10.—Mrs. Ines Sprague Stiness, the beautiful and vivacious grand-daughter of William Sprague, war Governor of Rhode Island, the heroine of several romances, is engaged to marry Baron D'Orsay, a tall and handsome man, who has plenty of money and belongs to good clubs.

Yet the unhappiness which has pursued Mrs. Stiness in her love affairs clouds this one. Her grandfather objects to the match only because Baron D'Orsay is not an American; the baron's relatives frown on it only because the charming American has not as much money as he has.

A few years ago, on the eve of her wedding to Harold Winpenny, a young Philadelphian, Mrs. Stiness, then nineteen, eloped with Henry M. Stiness, son of a former chief justice of Rhode Island, one of her grandfather's political enemies.

The marriage proved unhappy and within three years the young wife ran away to Paris from her home in Providence, a divorce following.

Since then Mrs Stiness has devoted herself to musical studies and riding horseback, finding time to shine in society.

It was reported she was engaged to Marquis De Villeneuve Tortonne, well known in New York. But if the report was true Mrs. Stiness exercised the privilege of every pretty woman and changed her mind.

Former Governor Sprague is crossing to New York on La Lorraine with Mrs. Sprague, who is at once stepmother and aunt of Mrs. Stiness.

BORAH BARES ROOT'S DOUBLE DEALS ON PANAMA CANAL TREATY

SIGNED FREE TOLLS PACT WITH COLOMBIA

WASHINGTON, April 10.—The Senate Canal Committee has begun its fifteen days' hearings on the Panaman repeal bill. The first day's hearing was very lively.

Senator Borah called attention to the fact that Senator Root (the real author of President Wilson's Panama surrender policy) signed a treaty with Colombia when he was Secretary of State. This treaty granted to the ships of Colombia absolutely free passage always in the Panama Canal. This freedom from tolls applied to Colombia's domestic and foreign ships. In making such treaty the United States acted as the owner of the canal. The privilege, however, violates the Hay-Pauncefote treaty as Senator Root now interprets it.

Senator Borah said Senator Root publicly explained that before signing the treaty as Secretary of State he obtained Great Britain's consent.

Another Senator remarked that an unprecedented situation was presented if this statement was true—the United States asking the permission of Great Britain before making a treaty with a third nation.

Senator O'Gorman promptly inquired why, if Great Britain permitted Secretary Root to make the treaty with Colombia, she subsequently protested against any such special favors in favor of the Republic of Colombia or Panama.

Great Britain had no protested.

The committee requested Senator O'Gorman to ask the State Department for all correspondence with Great Britain bearing on this important question.

The committee heard arguments by Senators Norris and Thomas in support of their amendments to the repeal bill. The discussion brought out the fact that Dr. S. S. Huebner of the University of Pennsylvania, expert for the House Committee that investigated the shipping trust, has reported that more than 90 per cent. of the coastwise ships were controlled by the railroads. Under the Panama canal act railroad-owned ships cannot use the canal at all.

"The natural conclusion from that is," suggested Senator Borah, "that Sir Edward Grey, after he wins his present contention, will protest against the inhibition in the law that forbids railroad-owned or controlled ships the use of the canal under any circumstances."

Senator Norris said he was unqualifiedly for the repeal on economic grounds, but gave the impression that he would not vote for it unless amended to include a declaration that this government has the right to discriminate if it cared to exercise it. If there was to be any discrimination, he said, he would prefer that it should be in favor of American ships engaged in South American trade rather than the coastwise.

"Unqualified repeal of this law would estop this government in the future from exercising what I believe to be its absolute right, and that is why I want this declaration included," said Senator Norris.

Among certain Democrats who are inclined to vote for repeal because the President demands it, but who, nevertheless, fear that direct repeal is antagonistic to American principles, there is a strong under-current favoring amendment that will write into the proposed repeal a declaration that the United States does not surrender any of its rights. Such an amendment will be offered before the bill reaches the final stage and will be supported by some Democrats who have not the courage to come out in the open against the administration, although they believe a vital blunder has been made.

"Ahoy! But don't feel in the least obliged to do so if you'd rawther not. I never ahoy myself; it's a bit coarse, dontcherknow. The movies will now begin!" As Professor Slick, the commander of the battleship "Piffle," uttered these stirring words the Society of Anglo-Maniac Apes gave three cheers. It was indeed a thrilling scene. Suddenly there was an alarm of "man overboard!" but as it turned out not to be an Englishman it did not interest the Professor. In the meanwhile the ship's quartet favored the company with the following ballad or chansonette:

"We're English-led and English-ruled,
And we sheds many bitter tears
To think we hacted to hawfully rude
To those British Grenadiers!"

All at once, without any announcement or previous notification of any sort, or, in other words, in a quite unexpected and unforescen manner, a perfectly terrific concussion, accompanied by the most horrible howls, was—

'REPEAL MOCKS NATION,' SAYS JUSTICE BURKE

By THOMAS BURKE,
Formerly Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the State of Washington.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—To lure a people on to assume a burden of $100,000,000 on the promise that it would bring relief to them in marketing the products of their skill and labor, and then, after the work was completed and their sacrifices had been made, to put it out of their power to reap the advantages promised would be the most shameful and stupendous confidence game ever played upon the people of this or any other country. To justify it on the grounds of national honor would be a mockery.

No nation should be asked on any pretext to surrender its sovereign right to regulate its own domestic affairs over even the most insignificant part of its territory. The Panama Canal Zone, with the Panama Canal, so far from being insignificant, is one of the most costly and important pieces of territory belonging to the United States. On none other of equal size has so much money been spent. Its absolute unqualified control by this country is vital to our safety and welfare.

A partnership in it, even in the most limited way, would be disastrous. A house with only two rooms is better for the peace and happiness of a family than a mansion with ten rooms shared by two families.

The United States has as clear a right to the Canal Zone as she has to Alaska or to any other territory of the United States. She created the canal at her own risk and cost. At her sole expense she is to operate, maintain and defend it. There is not a sentence, line or word in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty which in terms cedes or impairs any of our sovereignty over the territory. The claim rests on inference on implication only.

It is a saying of a great New England moralist that there are times when a man does not have a right to all his rights. This is as true of States as of individuals.

Suppose, for the sake of argument, that Great Britain has some right or color of right to what she claims in this dispute. In view of the great benefits which the labors, vast expenditures and sacrifices of the United States in this great work have conferred upon her and upon mankind, surely if there ever was a case in this world where it could be truly said that a nation does not have a right to all its rights," this is such a case, and Great Britain is the nation.

STRONG RESOLUTIONS AGAINST REPEAL BY WORCESTER LABOR MEN

Following is the text of the resolutions against the Panama Canal tolls repeal policy of President Wilson, which were unanimously adopted by the Central Labor Union of Worcester, comprising delegates from thirty-five large unions of the city:

We, the members of the Worcester, Mass., Central Labor Union, hereby protest against the repeal of the provisions of the Panama Canal Act, which was passed after full and adequate discussion by Congress, signed by a Democratic President, approved in the platforms and distinctly accepted by the candidates of the Democratic and Progressive parties and made binding by the vote of over 12,000,000 American citizens in the presidential campaign of 1912.

"To repeal it now would be to repudiate the will of the American people and to surrender ignominiously to the dictate of a foreign power.

"The free tolls provision is necessary for the protection of our coastwise shipping against the subsidized vessels of Europe and especially those of England and against the competition of the Canadian railroads.

"If Congress should, in an hour of weakness, surrender American interests in the matter of canal tolls, the same improper and untenable interpretation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty will also involve the dismantling of all fortifications in the Canal Zone and forbid the American fleet to use the canal in the time of war, except on the same terms as the warships of other nations, including the country at war with the United States.

"We are unilaterally opposed to the large expenditures of money on the part of Carnegie to prevent the United States from exercising control of her domestic commerce.

"We feel that it would be more fitting for him to use the money spent in defeating free tolls on the ill paid labor in the mills from which he derives his revenue.

"We therefore call on Congress to maintain the honor, the interests and the national dignity of this republic by rejecting any bill which proposed to repeal the free tolls provision of the Panama Canal Act.

"We also urge the Senate to refuse the question to arbitration.

"Resolved, That copies of this declaration be sent to President Wilson and to all the members of the cabinet; to Vice-President for presentation to the Senate; to the Speaker for presentation to the House of Representatives; to Samuel E. Winslow, Representative from the Fourth Worcester Congressional District."

CUMMINS OPPOSES BOWING TO BRITISH READING OF TREATY

CHICAGO, April 10.—United States Senator Albert B. Cummins of Iowa, in an address here, criticised the Democratic administration, saying: "The President has for the time being obliterated Congress, that ancient and once powerful department of the government. When, therefore, I speak of the Democratic administration, I mean Woodrow Wilson. The overthrow of representative government does not seem to have excited alarm, but the day will come when the country will understand better than it does now what it is to preserve independence of legislative authority.

"The second question concerns our rights under the treaty. To that I would say there is nothing in the treaty, nothing in the understanding of the treaty at the time it was made, that in any way restricts or limits our absolute sovereignty in this regard, and the man who is willing to accept the construction asserted by Great Britain, or yield to the still more ignominious interpretation involved in assenting to the demand made by the President, is willing to pay a higher price for the friendship of that country than I am willing to pay for the favor of the whole world."

POLICE WOMEN ADVISERS URGED FOR HUB 'BEATS'

Mrs. Elwood Spear of Cambridge, a member of the Authors' Club, urged the need of women police for Boston before the Writers' League meeting at No. 3 Joy street. She said she would like to see two kinds of police women; some in uniform, some in civilian dress.

Her plan does not include their making arrests. They would cover beats patrolled by the usual policemen, and refer arrests to them. Her idea is they would act as a medium of justice for timid women who were being annoyed, but did not like to appeal to policemen, and for court cases where young girls hesitated to tell the real facts to any but a woman officer.

In addition to protecting against "mashers," Mrs. Pierce would have the women police do a quiet part in maintaining orderly conduct at the parks and other public places of amusement.

Thus, when young girls or young men verged on the conduct that would likely become disorderly, she would speak a word of motherly restraint to the young people.

Her Face Lopsided, Demands $50,000

CHICAGO, April 10.—Miss Mary E. Bartlett, fifty, has begun an action for $50,000 against the Pratt Institute for failing to beautify her face. She alleges she paid $32 for an operation by which, it was promised, pouches beneath her eyes would be tightened up so they would not show. One side of her face was fixed, she says, but the other side sagged back to its original position, giving her a peculiar, half-smiling, half-leering expression.

Tries to Send Her Baby by Parcel Post

CHATTANOOGA, April 10.—A well-dressed woman whose name could not be learned made a futile appeal to Postmaster John Emery Conner to be allowed to send her seventeen-pound son to an aunt in Atlanta by parcel post.

The woman stated that she could not afford to take the child herself.

THE EASIEST WAY TO END DANDRUFF

Stop Falling Hair and Itching Scalp.

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely and that is to dissolve it. This destroys it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

By morning most, if not all, of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and dizzing of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

If you want to keep your hair looking rich, do by all means get rid of dandruff, for nothing destroys the hair so quickly. It not only starves the hair and makes it fall out, but it makes it stringy, straggly, dull, dry, brittle and lifeless, and everybody notices it. You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive, and four ounces is all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.

Scene from "The Greater Love."

THE GREATER LOVE

PART II.

CHAPTER I.

Harrish had not seen the meeting. And there was no other meeting for many days after the wreck.

Jack had been carried to the ground room of the lighthouse for quiet. Even the waves were hushed in the ground room. Even the wind shriek sounded faintly there.

But in the silence the man who had been saved from the sea and the woman who had once pledged her faith to him faced fearfully the wind and wave of the life storm.

It was many days after Jack's rescue before he knew what had happened. That first awakening on the beach as he was pulled out of the surf had been obliterated by weakness. He did not know what tender hands ministered to him during the days of darkness.

But when the final turn of recovery came—when the life that had hovered on the verge of the Great Abyss was snatched back to the cliffs of being, then on the life spark's glow fell the shadow.

Years and distances can separate a man and a woman in love—and they will make the ultimate meeting only happier. Quarrel or deceit or misunderstanding may separate only to bring them closer together again. But here the walls of destiny were builded high and impenetrable between the souls of those who looked into each other's eyes, who daily met each other and kept, in suffering, their silence.

Mary cursed Jack Sargent back to life. But ever since the day when she saw him first restored to full understanding—when blunt old Harrish, her husband, had come into the room and told him all that had happened, the sick man had been speechless.

Even when he was able to walk a little, tottering first around the little ground room, then out upon the beach, he acted as one walking in a daze. That first word "Mary" that he uttered in his first moment of recognition when Harrish dragged him from the sea was the only word she heard from his lips in three long weeks.

CHAPTER II.

"I think I shall be able to go away tomorrow, Mrs. Harrish," he said one day as he made his weak way out the door on the brief stroll he attempted each afternoon. "I am very grateful for what you have done. I will soon be able to pay"—

"Jack—if you dare to say it, I will"—

"Dare to say what?" he demanded in an icy tone.

"You hate me because I married?" "I hate all women. I hate the name of woman. Their promises are like the little pretty things they adore—like flowers and moonlight. Their faith will fade in a season, like a pink ribbon on last Summer's dress."

"Jack, you know you don't mean that—you know it. I thought you were dead."

"I wish I were," he answered.

"But you never wrote to me. You left me alone—utterly alone. You never sent a word, a little gift or token."

"You promised to keep your faith with me—you know it—and you knew you didn't do it."

"You promised to write to me every day of all your voyages. I have not had a word," she sobbed.

"You mean you love me still?" he cried.

"I shall love you always, but—only!"

"You mean you love him more—your husband?"

She did not answer now. She turned away her head and the wind caught the bright wisps of her uncovered hair.

CHAPTER III.

The recovery that seemed to have begun so well was suddenly halted. The fighting spirit of the man weakened.

"The trouble is, you know, that fellow doesn't want to get well," said the doctor to Harrish.

Harrish said nothing to the doctor.

He had not spoken to Mary of the wreck nor of the man whom he had saved from the sea. He had been wrapt in a dismal silence that filled the place.

He and his wife lived in dread separateness. She, ministering to the injured man, could not speak even to him. Only the low whirr of the machinery that turned the light sounded at the Point Lighthouse. Over the darkness of the waves the warning flare gleamed with its intermittent constancy. So Love gleams over Life.

Mary moved as in a dream. The coming—the recognition of Jack had struck her with dumb fear. His lingering sickness had increased the fear and hallowed it. She was fighting for the life of the only man she had ever loved, and she was fighting at the same time her battle against herself.

She felt the cold look of her husband ever upon her. She felt that he knew. But, even in the rebellion of her heart against his suspicion, she suffered in silence. She suffered because of her own self-torment. She could stand the looks of Harrish. She could endure the reproachful dumbness of Jack. It was herself she hated.

Loved by two mighty men, she hated herself. Such is the simplicity, the complexity, the mystery, the clarity of a woman's soul.

CHAPTER IV.

But Jack got well.

The dull suffering of his mind yielded at last to the insistent revival of the body. The reproaches that he cast upon the woman he loved surrendered to the care that the woman he loved gave to him in his helplessness.

When he tottered out of bed for the first time and fell in a faint beside the bed, it was Mary who lifted him and dragged him back.

She said nothing next day. He knew what had happened. He got up again.

"Jack, you can't; you know you can't," she cried.

Her voice thrilled him. Her pity lighted the darkness of jealousy as the great whirring lamps lighted the distances of the dull sea.

"Mary," he said, "you can't—you don't—love—him?"

Again she was silent. But she turned away her face. She had been about to take him by the arm and help him. Suddenly she was in his arms.

They did not know that Harrish was looking in from the window of the ground room. Perhaps, in the brief, blissful surrender of that moment, they would not have cared if they had known.

CHAPTER V.

Five days later Jack was able to be about the place.

He strolled along the beach. He strolled to the rim of the lighthouse cliff. There he sat down and waited for Mary.

She came to him as she had come in the old days—in her simple calico dress, with the wind-blown in the crevasses of her golden hair. She came and sat beside him on the cliff-side—not a little apart from him.

There was little that they could say to one another. They were entangled in one of those inevitable nets of Fate that Fate itself might fight against in vain.

Harrish came to the cliff-rim.

"You can go home," he said sternly to his wife.

"I—I must go home?" she gasped. It was the first time that he had ever spoken to her in harshness.

"Now," was his answer.

She fled down the path to the lighthouse. She was not fleeing from his anger, but from herself, from the truth, from love, from Fate.

Jack reeled to his feet.

"What do you mean?" he cried.

"I dragged you out of the water down there," said Harrish slowly. "I know who you are. I know who you were. You were the man that Mary was to marry."

"Yes," said Jack.

"And when I have taken you from the sea and put you in my house and let my wife watch over you for weeks, you are—God, man—if you are able to stand a fight, the fighting time has come."

They grappled—the mighty man and the weak.

Over the high cliffside Jack was hurled to the rocks and red rocks which Harrish had dragged him only two months before.

Harrish stood and looked down at the limp body. There was no rescue now in his heart.

CHAPTER VI.

"Where is Jack—where is he?" she cried to Harrish. "I only want to know that he is safe. I will die; I will do anything for you or him. All I want to know is that you have not quarreled."

"There he is," said Harrish.

She was fleeing away again in an instant.

She ran to the lighthouse. She climbed the stairs and cut the long rescue rope from its fastenings in the light turret.

Breathless, exhausted, but determined, she reached the cliff again.

Harrish still gazed, grim and speechless, at the body below.

She fastened the rope. She gripped it with her arms. In an instant she was down. In another she had dashed the sea water in the face of the unconscious man.

He wakened in her arms.

The tide was rising over the low rocks.

She drew him to his feet. She put his hands to the rope. They started to climb. Harrish drew out his knife. Half way up Mary paused, exhausted. She looked above her in mute appeal to the man who stood there. She saw the knife in his hand.

Harrish caught the rope suddenly. His steadfast eyes were on him still.

There between the cliff top and the sea, between the cliff and death, they hung—she and the man she loved. But in their peril there was peace; in their nearness there was happiness.

She looked calmly at the man whose knife gleamed above them—whose hand was on the rope that held them.

Harrish dropped the knife. He began to pull up the rope.

The first whom he drew over the cliff was the man; the second the woman.

He turned and walked heavily away, leaving them together.

TRIAL OF TWO POLICEMEN ON AGAIN TODAY

The trial of Patrolmen Herbert W. Andrews and Timothy J. Kelly of the Court square station, on charges of conduct unbecoming officers preferred by Representative P. Joseph McManus, whom they arrested, was resumed at police headquarters today before a trial board, consisting of Captains Joseph A. Harriman, Herbert W. Goodwin and Michael H. Crowley.

It is alleged that Andrews boarded a trolley car on the morning of December 13, and with the assistance of Kelly, removed McManus to the station-house after Andrews had arrested him on a charge of intoxication.

McManus claims Kelly twisted his wrists and that both of the patrolmen used improper language. McManus insisted on a trial in the Municipal Court that morning and the trial was stopped by Judge Murray.

IS YOUR BACK LAME?
A Glass of Rheumasalts Will Fix You Up
If your back aches—look out! It may mean kidney trouble, which, if left to develop, leads to such fatal diseases as dropsy and Bright's disease. A lame back generally means that your kidneys are clogged with impurities—they are sluggish in their work of filtering the blood. Most rheumatism, headaches, liver troubles, nervousness, constipation, dizziness, sleepless nights and bladder disorders come from sluggish kidneys.
You can help the weakened kidneys and put them in good working order again by taking Rheumasalts in a glass of water before breakfast for a few mornings.
Rheumasalts is a scientifically blended and chemically pure granulated lithia drink that is a wonderful remedy for all kidney troubles. Rheumasalts flushes the clogged kidneys and stimulates them to action. It cleans out the stomach and intestines, eliminates toxins and poisons and leaves the intestinal canal clean and sweet.
Rheumasalts acts quickly without griping or nausea. It is a uric acid solvent as well as a saline laxative.
Rheumasalts comes in 25c, 50c and $1.00 bottles at druggists. If yours hasn't Rheumasalts send 25c, 50c or $1.00 to the Rheumasalts Company, Dept. 166A, Minneapolis, Minn., and will send you a bottle prepaid.

ENGAGED GIRL

Dr. Yarros Makes Plea

ASKS PROTECTION

We should protect the engaged girl by requiring a certificate issued by a qualified board of health, specially appointed.

We would all prefer that parents take this responsibility of ascertaining the fitness of the prospective husband of their daughter, but unfortunately such responsibility will be neglected while the knowledge of certain facts is yet insufficiently known to the general public, consequently the burden falls on the State.

The State already interferes with marriage by making certain requirements. It seems perfectly reasonable to me that if such a law were passed a larger number of men would take steps to make themselves fit for marriage.—From address by Dr. Rachelle Yarros to Women's Municipal League.

BUYS CANDY, GIRL KILLED BY QUINCY CAR

Charles Dunlap, motorman, was scheduled for arraignment in the Dorchester Court today charged with manslaughter in causing the death of Mildred Sweeney, the four-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sweeney of No. 3 Dunn court, Dorchester.

Dunlap's car struck the child as she was crossing Dorchester avenue returning to her home after buying a piece of candy.

The little girl was given a penny while playing about her home by a neighbor and she at once hastened to a nearby candy store at No. 1152 Dorchester avenue. With a stick of candy in her hand she began to retrace her steps, and ran in front of the big electric car.

The car was jacked up and the body of the little girl taken from the forward trucks. She died on the way to the hospital, where it was stated that death was due to a compound fracture of the skull.

TEN CHILDREN SAVED AT FIRE IN MALDEN HOME

Ten children were guided out of the Volunteer Children's Home on Irview avenue, Malden, and two infirm women were carried out on mattresses when the building caught fire from torches with which painters were burning off paint near the eaves. The damage was estimated at $7,000.

Mrs. Beatrice Hayes, a victim of rheumatic fever, was carried from the burning story, where the smoke and flames were thickest, by City Physician Earl H. McMichael, City Almoner Daniel S. Paige, his son, Donald S. Paige, and Patrolman John J. Bushell, who also carried out Mrs. Elisabeth Hebert, matron of the home and wife of Adjutant Wilson Reinert of the Cadets of America, superintendent of the institution.

TEST GRIM ENGINE OF DEATH THAT IS TO KILL GUNMEN MONDAY

FAINT HOPE OF STAY CHEERS 4 NEAR CHAIR

representative of the District Attorney, agreed to waive legal formalities, go before a Supreme Court justice and permit Brown to tell his story under oath if he desired to with a respite for the condemned men. Brown consented and arrangements were made to have him sworn today.

This latest development was told to the four prisoners in their cells today and they hailed the news with joy. They realize that Brown's story gives them one more chance.

Governor Glynn is expected to take action as soon as the hearing before the Supreme Court justice is concluded. The Governor refused to comment on the course he will pursue but the relatives of the prisoners and the host of rabbis who are fighting for their lives are confident he will remain true to his word and grant the necessary respite if "legal grounds can be shown to warrant such action.

GLYNN HOPES TO SAVE MEN.

The position has taxed the nerves of Governor Glynn. He has said he stands for justice. If he followed the dictates of his heart he said he would grant the doomed men a respite. This he wants to do and has been hoping against hope the defence would discover some technicality which would enable him to stay the executions without breaking his oath of office.

If the sentence of the four prisoners is stayed, counsel for the defendants will immediately file motions for a new trial with a bill of exceptions which may eventually set them free.

E. B. M. Brown of New York formerly was a warm friend of former Governor Sulzer. He described himself as "a friend of unfortunates and a rabbi without a congregation."

"In August, 1913, Sulzer asked me to be a witness for him in the impeachment trial and I refused," he said. "Subsequently I was told that Luban had offered to give testimony for Sulzer. Some time later I was discussing with one of District-Attorney Whitman's assistants the possibility of Luban's appearing as a witness for impeachment and he told me to tell Sulzer to look out for any story that Luban might tell.

FINAL NOTE.

"I told the assistant it would make it stronger if he would put that in writing, and he thought he would. That note, which I showed the Governor I turned over to Sulzer."

"A short time afterward, I received from Sulzer a package of letters which he said would refresh my memory concerning dates in the event of my testifying. I declined to appear as a witness during the impeachment and put the letters away.

"I was going through them when I chanced upon the Assistant District Attorney's note. He then determined to make what use of it I could."

"Did you see the Assistant District Attorney write the note?" Brown was asked.

"I did," he replied, "and he will admit it."

WIVES SEEK GOVERNOR.

A futile attempt to appeal personally to the Governor for the lives of the gunmen was made, by three relatives and a friend of the condemned men's families.

They were the wives of Louis Rosenberg and Harry Horowitz and the mother of Jacob Seidenscher and a Mrs. Volk of New York. The quartet waited an hour around the Capitol and then, fearing there was no chance of seeing the Governor, left for New York.

Reports from Ossining today said that Circelli is showing signs of breaking down under the constant strain.

He dreams of a new and convincing presentation of his case to Governor Glynn by a new lawyer, armed with affidavits which will establish his alibi beyond the peradventure of a doubt or a new interpretation of the "tragedy which paved the way to the conviction of his innocence.

Rosenberg, the strongest of the four, gave Dr. Jacob Goldstein, the Tombs chaplain for Hebrews, this last word to his old friends of the East Side:

ROSENBERG'S MESSAGE.

"I want the world to know that I am innocent of this crime, that I am paying the price of a bad reputation. I had the best father and mother a boy ever had, but I was not a good son to them. I went the wrong way.

"Tell the boys on the East Side, the boys I know, there are hundreds of them—the boys who go around raising—well, you know what I mean, tell them about the mistakes I made, which I could have avoided if I had done the right thing. Let them know that the synagogue is their best home and God their best friend.

"They may think they are getting away with it; they may think they are too strong, too well protected to be reached. They may think they have the backing which puts them above the law, but they are making the mistake of their lives, as I made the mistake for which I am paying my life. When the showdown comes and they are accused of something they never did, all this other life will be brought up against them and they will have to pay just as I am, for something they never did."

'RABBIS BLUNDERED, LET LAW TAKE COURSE,' SAYS JEWISH PAPER

The Jewish Advocate publishes today, under the heading "Rabbis Have Blundered," the following editorial on the intercession by five Jewish rabbis in behalf of the convicted New York gunmen:

"Our protest for Rabbis Periera Mendes, Berard Drachman and Moses Hyamson does not prevent us offering a vigorous protest against the action of these reverend gentlemen, whereby they have involved the Jewish community in the fate of the gang that shot down Rosenthal, the gambler, in front of the notorious 'Metropole,' in New York city.

"That the Jewish prison chaplain of Sing Sing, Jacob Goldstein, should indulge in a lachrymose scene is perhaps a natural adjunct to his particular office, though we could well have been spared the publicity of it.

"But that men so careful of the good name of the Jew as Rabbi H. Pariera Mendes and his colleagues should have been inveigled into a dramatic appeal to Governor Glynn passes our understanding.

"HAVE NO EXCUSE."

"It is perfectly true that three of the men about to die are Jews, by birth, and still more true is it that the Jews throughout the world have had to bear the onus of public affliction with no reprehensible and unJewish a gang as the murdered and murderers, but this racial tie does not demand that any rabbi should stand between these blackguards and their fate.

"That politicians should have won unfair rights for Becker is no excuse for interceding for these gangsters, for all that it accomplishes is to increase the average person's contempt for the courts and the judges.

"But whatever might be said in favor of sickly sentimentalism still affords no shadow of excuse for the appeal to Governor Glynn to stay the executions until after the Passover, because it is a festival of rejoicing, which will be marred for everyone of our faith if this cloud overshadows its beginning. We trust the rabbis will be able to explain that this is the intention of some regret.

"LET LAW TAKE COURSE."

"For we believe we are interpreting the attitude of the average Jew when we say that the cloud over the case is not the execution of the gangsters, but the crime that rounded out their evil lives.

"If there is one duty that the Jew owes the State, it is that he do all possible, in the enforcement of the law; if there is one thing he should avoid, it is being used as a tool to bring justice into disrepute.

"Rabbi Mendes, a graduate of Jewish principles, have a special duty it is to proclaim from their pulpits 'Let the law take its course.'

MANY VISITORS, MUSIC AND PRAYER TO CHEER LAST DAYS OF MEN

OSSINING, N. Y., April 10.—The four condemned gunmen are having many visitors during their last few days of life.

Maurice Seidenscher, brother of Whitey Lewis, spent some time with him, as he has every week for the last four months, and almost every day for the last week.

"Jake and I have been pals, as well as brothers, Maurice said. "In all ways came to me when he was in trouble. I always shared his confidence; he always told me the truth. Jake realises that all hope is gone. Under such circumstances he would tell me what part he had in the murder, if he did have any part. Today he kept telling me over and over again: 'I am innocent.' As I left him he said:

"'Maurice, don't worry about me. I can take what is coming to me. Don't let grief overcome you. Go you cheering up the old folks. Tell them for me that I'll go to the chair as an innocent man and that they need not be ashamed of me.'"

Rabbi Jacob Goldstein, one of the chaplains of the prison, visited Gyp the Blood, Lefty Louie and Whitey Lewis for the first time since his last vain appeal to Governor Glynn to reconsider his refusal to stay the course of the law. As he left the prison to return to New York he told a graphic story.

KISSED RABBI'S HAND.

"When I went in," he said, "each of the boys clasped my hand and kissed it. I couldn't allow that, for, as I told them, I came to them not as a rabbi, but as a man. I talked long with them. I told them:

"'God will welcome your souls just as surely as your mothers would welcome you if they stood outside and the doors of your cells were open. Just so sure as your mothers would clasp you to their hearts will God welcome you, but you must purge your souls of all lies.'

"I told them over and over that they must not face their Creator with anything held back or undisclosed. Then I talked with Rosenberg alone. Before I left him I asked 'Louis, isn't there something else?' He looked straight back into my eyes and said:

"'Rabbi, I know what you mean. There is nothing else.'

"Day before yesterday the boys received a letter written in Yiddish, and signed 'Wellwisher.' It was poorly written, and the boys could not make out its meaning. They saved it for me, and I translated it for them. It told them they were fools to go to the chair to save Becker, and that if they would turn to the District Attorney and tell him the truth they could save themselves. It said the worst of all would befall them then would be a few years in prison, and at the end of that time they would be pardoned.

"The boys listened eagerly to the letter. They thought Goldstein had missed it with expressions of contempt, but Whitey said:

"'That could do good. If the District Attorney wants the truth all he has to do is turn to the record of our trial. He will find the whole truth written there.'

OUTBURST BY GYP.

Gyp the Blood had nothing to say to Rabbi Goldstein. Whitey Lewis's outburst was the second from him during the day. For a long time in the afternoon he sat in his cell with his knees drawn under his chin. Members of the death watch saw him suddenly bring his head and knee and his head and heard him cry:

"I am innocent! God knows I am innocent! All I have to say is, I am innocent!"

Last Christmas the men in the death house found especial enjoyment in a graphophone concert. For some days past the gunmen have been asking if they might not have another, and the Rev. Burton H. Lee, rector of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal Church of Ossining, brought in his machine with the records the men had asked for.

At 4 o'clock the concert began and continued half an hour, with repetitions of "The Holy City," "Nearer, My God to Thee" and "Home, Sweet Home." Then Dago Frank called for the Lord's Prayer, and, with Mr. Lee leading, all joined in. Most of the other twelve men in the death house also joined, among them Jung Hing, a Chinese, whose only English is the prayer. Men on the death watch said it seemed to them that Father Hans Schmidt took part in this.

Gyp the Blood asked for the Apostles' Creed after the prayer and was refused. Mr. Lee said that at the mid-week prayer service in his church he would say a special prayer for the souls of the gunmen.

PASSOVER FEAST.

Arrangements were made for such observation of the Passover season as is possible inside the prison. Warden Clancy has barred bringing in food from outside kitchens, but the prison commissary made up a menu which the condemned men and in which he made what changes they suggested.

Dago Frank, although not looking forward to a part in the Passover celebration, was much interested in the menu. He asked if he could not have "plenty of spaghetti," and when told that he could, wrote out his own recipe for its preparation. He expressed his doubts of the ability of an "American cook" to make the dish as it should be made.

For the three Jews among the gunmen a special Passover service, or "seder," will be held tomorrow evening. Rabbi Mayer Kopfstein of the Congregation Adath Israel, No. 551 East One Hundredth and Sixty-ninth street, to which Jacob Rosenberg, Lefty Louie's father belongs, will conduct this service. It will take on, to a certain extent, the social aspects of the season, and, while it will not be possible for the three men to eat at the same table, small tables will be put in their cells and they will eat a special dinner at the same hour.

Lefty Louie's wife visited him today. Warden Clancy is making every possible concession to their relatives.

IS MAY SEE MEN DIE.

State Electrician Davis went to Sing Sing today to begin his preparations for the executions. The full death watch is on duty outside the cells occupied by the four men. It will be maintained until after they have met their execution at sunrise Monday. No further plans have been made with regard to the order in which the men will go to their deaths.

No question has arisen as to how many witnesses of the executions there should be. The law provides that there shall not be more than twelve in number, but in this instance it has not been determined whether Monday's will be one execution or four. If it should be regarded as four executions there would be sixty-eight witnesses.

INEZ MILHOLLAND UTTERS LEGAL MURDER PROTEST

Suffragist Would Reprieve Gunmen and then Abolish Capital Punishment.

INEZ-MILHOLLAND-BOISSEVAIN.

NEW YORK, April 10.—Society shows itself more brutal and heartless than the bloodiest murderer when it executes a criminal, according to Inez Milholland-Boissevain, suffragist.

In a remarkable plea for commutation of the sentence of the four gunmen in Sing Sing, she vividly pictures the torture of the months of waiting for death, and concludes: 'Let us get rid of capital punishment.' And let us begin with these pitiable and depraved youths in Sing Sing prison."

Her statement reads:

Will the people of New York State spend an Easter Sunday of peace and blessedness, with the knowledge that Easter Monday ushers in inevitable death to four young men whose crime is that they are the victims of the warshapen offsprings of our present social conditions?

Life, education and environment have penalized these youths to the fullest extent. Society should not further penalize them to the hideous extent at present contemplated. No murderer, however bloody, has ever slowly, deliberately tortured his victims by facing them for days and months with death at a fixed day and hours.

PASSION ANGUISH.

Imagine, as the dragging months go by, this facing, not of death alone, but life and death at the same time. The unendurable anguish, the shocks, the thumping at the heart, the nausea, the insomnia, the obsessing thoughts, the longing for life, the atrocious fear, the realization that all is over, that there are only a few hours of empty waiting and then death—the naked terror, the sensation of being stripped naked, the feeling of the oncoming moment when sun, air, sound, light, speech and the power of action are taken away; the clutch at life when, though death has not yet arrived, life seems already spent.

The condemned sits motionless for hours, all thought extinguished, holding himself against all motion. Ever ythought is madness and every gesture an temptation. Then disappears in the agony waiting till the time when the little green door shall open.

MALICIOUS TORTURE.

This is the malicious torture which society prepares for its transgressors in the name of righteousness. Society at once shows itself more brutalised than the vilest of its murderers. Nor does the torture stop at murder or the boldest or those most equipped with fortitude on which to work its vengeance. It visits its stupid and self-indulgent victence on the weakest, the most senseless and most sinned against.

In times past it delighted to torture the physically sick; unchbacks and dwarfs were mocked at, vilified and beaten for a fault that was not their own. Later it grew kindlier in its attitude toward these misfits of nature, more pitying, but at the same time it reserved to itself the delight of torturing those who were mentally sick; lunatics and madmen were put in dungeons, strung up, eaten for the devil that was in them. And then when understanding grew, sympathy grew, and now, while we place such unfortunate members of society under restraint, we do so with the feeling of sympathy and the desire to help restore them to normal life, or, failing that, to make life as sweet as possible to their blighted natures.

We must learn to treat the morally sick with the same sympathy and everlasting pity. Restrain them by all means until such time as they can safely become members of normal society, but to torture them, to wreak vengeance upon them for a fault that is not theirs (for crime today is recognized as a disease), is a viler crime than any that could be perpetrated by anyone of these anti-social members of the community.

Not only that, but the brutalising of our finer nature accomplished by our endorsement and acquiescence in this primitive system perpetuates that self-same brutal atmosphere which produces crime. We need not be the executioner nor the warden of the all in order to undergo that hardening process which makes execution possible. Each one of us who reads or hears or acquiesces in the executoin prolongs to an incalculable extent the brutalising and ever-present brutal elements in our nature which all of progress is intent on getting rid of. Moreover, we endanger our own sanity, for the less we are susceptible to the shocks produced by violent punishment of crime, the less capable are we of appreciating the standard, and hence the reaction to a public opinion that is gross and violent is itself gross and violent and dangerous to the safety and welfare of all.

ENNOBLING EMOTION.

There are very few of us who, since reading Governor Glynn's determination to grant no reprieve to the four young men condemned to death for the slaying of Herman Rosenthal, have not had a feeling of heart heaviness, of infinite pity; in some cases we have not been able to find for that pity a reasoning justification, but it nevertheless is a more valid and ennobling emotion than any reasoning process could possibly be. It is a manifestation of our finest nature.

Why not crystallize it into an activity that will enable us to escape a similar feeling of heart heaviness and depression in future?

Let us get rid of capital punishment. It is high time in this stage of the game of our civilization and social progress. And let us begin with these pitiable and depraved youths in Sing Sing Prison.

Let the Governor grant them a reprieve and meanwhile let the Legislature act. And let the reprieve accompanied by a Sunday bear some fruit of the kind that he for whom Easter Sunday is a remembrance would rejoice in.

'Lefty Louie's' Last Words to Old East Side Friends

NEW YORK, April 10.—"Lefty Louie" Rosenberg, one of the doomed gunmen, today sent this last word to his old friends of the East Side:

I want the world to know that I am innocent of this crime, that I am paying the price of a bad reputation. I had the best father and mother a boy ever had, but I was not a good son to them. I went the wrong way.

Tell the boys on the East Side, the boys I know, there are hundreds of them—the boys who go around raising—well, you know what I mean, tell them about the mistakes I made, which I could have avoided if I had done the right thing. Let them know that the synagogue is their best home and God their best friend.

They may think they are getting away with it; they may think they are too strong, too well protected to be reached. They may think they have the backing which puts them above the law, but they are making the mistake of their lives, as I made the mistake for which I am paying my life. When the showdown comes and they are accused of something they never did, all this other life will be brought up against them and they will have to pay just as I am, for something they never did.

Sentiment in favor of the doomed men is growing rapidly. Not only is the feeling of sympathy for the desire to help restore them to normal life, or, failing that, to make life as sweet as possible to their blighted natures.

We must learn to treat the morally sick with the same sympathy and everlasting pity. Restrain them by all means until such time as they can safely become members of normal society, but to torture them, to wreak vengeance upon them for a fault that is not theirs (for crime today is recognized as a disease), is a viler crime than any that could be perpetrated by anyone of these anti-social members of the community.

admittedly the weakest of the five which resulted in the conviction of him, his three "pals" and of Lieutenant Charles Becker, who has since been granted a new trial.

Frank, also, is said to have the "weakest backbone" of the three gunmen. He was the first to accept religion following his conviction, an acceptance in which the other three gunmen have now, however, joined with fervor—and on no less than three occasions, heretofore, according to report, he has been on the very verge of giving the public a complete confession of all that he knew of the affair.

SEE LAST HOPES FADE.

On these occasions, it is said, he was restrained from carrying out his purpose only by the pleadings of the other gunmen, who insisted that, if he kept quiet, they all had a chance for life.

WIVES AND MOTHERS TRY IN VAIN TO GET INTERVIEW WITH GLYNN

NEW YORK, April 10.—Governor Glynn yesterday refused to see the mother and wives of three of the murderers of Rosenthal.

The duty that devolved upon him was very painful, but since the highest court in the State had affirmed the sentences he could not find any excuse for setting aside the judgment of the gunmen have now, however, of the twelve jurors who had convicted them before my sickness."

"If I wish to avoid useless and dramatic scenes I must refuse, and I refused and must still refuse to see even the relatives of the condemned men."

"He will suffer for this!" moaned Mrs. Louis Rosenberg, wife of "Lefty Louie."

"He sure is some Governor. I don't think!" said Leon-tured, black-eyed Mrs. Harry Horowitz, bride of "Gyp the Blood," with a sneer. "He says he is the people's Governor, and the people cannot even get near him," she added, in a frenzy.

An aged woman, robed in black and with a sombre hood drawn tight about her face, groaned and sobbed in a foreign dialect.

"Ach, my son! my son! my poor boy! are they going to murder him, too?"

The grief-stricken woman was Mrs. Seidenscher, mother of "Whitey Lewis."

As the way up from New York she had been crying, "I will go to the Governor, get down on my knees and beg him for the life of my boy. He is innocent. The Governor has a heart. He will save Jakey. I know he will."

"Whitey Lewis'" mother was stunned when told that the Governor could not see her.

Just then an attendant said to the party: "Mr. Potter, the pardon clerk will see you."

Mrs. Horowitz and Mrs. Rosenberg sought to comfort Mrs. Seidenscher by telling her there was a "pardon" in sight. Gleefully she followed them to Potter's office.

In as sympathetic words as he could command, Potter said: "I am very sorry, but the Governor says it is useless. There can be no reprieve, commutation or respite. The law must take its course."

"But cannot we see the Governor?" begged Mrs. Rosenberg. "I sent him a note from the Rev. Father Curry. All it asked was that my husband and the other boys be spared for one week—until the Jewish Passover ends. What harm can come from that?"

"We cannot. I am very sorry," replied Potter. "It is merely justice."

As the wretched party of four left the Capitol and reached the street one of its members recognized Senator Frawley.

"Oh, do help us, Senator! The Governor is going to kill our husbands," they supplicated.

Frawley was then forced to endure an ordeal quite like that of the Governor yesterday, when six rabbis implored him to intervene. There were tears in his eyes, too, when he said: "I wish I could do something, but the Governor is the only one to do it, and if he refuses what can I do?"

The women hung about the Capitol for hours, hoping to overhear if they met to go to the Governor. They got nothing but kind words. The last seen of them was when they boarded a train bound for New York.

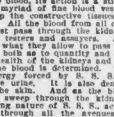
Helping Kidneys By Clearing Blood

A Function Greatly Assisted By a Well-Known Remedy.



Most readers will be interested to more clearly understand why analysis of urine is so frequently made in this city. In order to purify the blood, its action is a stimulant to the myriad of fine blood vessels that make up the complex organism of the kidneys. All the blood from all over the body must pass through the kidneys. They act as testers and assayers. And according to what they allow to pass and to stay in the urine, both as to quantity and materials, the health of the kidneys and the quality of the blood is determined. The kidneys, when forced to do so, as is shown in the urine. It is also demonstrated in the skin. And as the blood continues to sweep through the kidneys, the delicate nature of S. S. S., acting as it does through all the avenues of elimination, shows a marked decrease of disease manifestations as demonstrated in urine analysis. This assistance is a great relief to the kidneys. The body wants are more evenly distributed to the emunctories; their elimination is facilitated, and the tonic action afforded the liver, lungs, skin and kidneys. The cases of rheumatism, cystitis, chronic sore throat, huskiness of voice, bronchitis, asthma and the myriad of other reflex indications of weak kidney action, first purify your blood with S. S. S., so it will enable the tissues to rebuild the cellular strength and regain the normal health.

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's Old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray; also ends dandruff, itching scalp and stops falling hair. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe for about 50 cents.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy.

CHARLESTOWN 'L' WAR STAGES INCIDENTALLY FINE POLITICAL DRAMA

Action in the House of Representatives, looking to the removal of the elevated railway structure in Charlestown, the city proper and Roxbury has suddenly brought about one of the most dramatic political situations the State House has known in many years.

The man who led the House in favor of subway, and against the "overhead," is Representative Peter F. Tague of Charlestown.

Mr. Tague has let it be known that he desires the Congressional nomination, to succeed William F. Murray, postmaster designate.

A younger man who wants the same nomination is James H. Brennan.

Mr Brennan is in the State Senate

To the Senate will go, shortly, the Tague-Lawler bill, abolishing the Charlestown-Roxbury elevated structures and giving those sections of the city subways or tunnels.

Representative Tague and Senator Brennan both come from Charlestown. Each wants the Murray seat in Congress.

Charlestown wants nothing—nothing, nothing, nothing—so much as to have done with the elevated railway structure. The railway on stilts has made the Bunker Hill borough a railroad ward for Everett, Malden Somerville and the districts beyond.

The question promises to be, therefore, whether Brennan can do as much for Charlestown as Peter Tague has done, it being assumed that, having SHOUTED, the Tague-Lawler bill for an adverse report of the Committee on Metropolitan Affairs, the House will ultimately pass the bill and send it across the State House to the honorable Senate.

"It being assumed," etc.

"Assumed" because, although the bill HAS been substituted, nobody is so yet recorded.

When Representative Tague began to speak in favor of this bill approximately one-third of all the 240 chairs in the House of Representatives were emptied as if by magic.

"They re ducking," somebody said

Who "they" are, and why anybody should "duck" on this proposition, may be gone into at another time.

The substituted bill now takes its place in the Calendar. It may not be finally disposed of in the House for some days. In the meantime "work" will be done and, if Charlestown and Washington street, south from Castle to Dudley streets, are in earnest on this proposition, this is a little tip to them to send committees of business men to the State House from day to day and watch the pending bill from its present place in the House all the way to the Governor's pen; if so be it gets that far

There were several of these takings-the-elevated bills. The first to be presented by the Committee on Metropolitan Affairs proposed the removal of the elevated railway structure "in the city of Boston" and the substitution of subways therefor

The report of the Committee was the foregoing recommendation that the petitioner be given "leave to withdraw."

Mr. Tague promptly moved to substitute for the adverse report a second bill, providing for the removal of the elevated structure IN BOSTON PROPER AND IN ROXBURY AND CHARLESTOWN

This was the bill finally substituted on a voice vote, without a roll call. Perhaps it should be observed here, indeed, that when the opposition was called for there were not more than two or three "Noes"

There were few speakers, there was first class speaking

Peter Tague, as has been said, led the battle for subways. He first said was Representative Charles S. Lawler of Ward 24 in far Dorchester. There were brief remarks also by Representative Henry J McLaughlin of Charlestown and Representative D. F. Murray, Jr., of Ward 18. Former Mayor Henry E. Bothfeld of Newton, Republican, made the only speech in opposition

"In moving the substitution of this bill, Mr. Speaker," said Representative Tague, "I desire first to call the attention of members to the fact that last year this House passed a bill providing that the removal of the elevated structure from Main street in Charlestown might be submitted to the voters of Boston

"When, however, Election Day approached, that submission was ruled to be illegal—one by the Law Department and one by Judge Sanderson. As we are both with a bill to which nothing can take exception

"We of Charlestown feel that we present here one of the fairest bills ever drawn. It places no burden upon the people of Boston or on the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. It provides that all property owners, who are unreasonably benefited, must assume the burden.

"Assuming that burden, Mr. Speaker, will be a privilege and a pleasure in comparison with the burden Charlestown has been carrying for the past fourteen years.

"The elevated structure is of absolutely no benefit to Charlestown. We get nothing from it. It has darkened and paralyzed the main business street of our town.

"When the original plan of such a structure was first proposed Charlestown was assured by representatives of the Elevated Company that we need hardly to be disturbed by it. They said the route would be out along the railroad yards through Rutherford avenue. I stand of being an injury to our district, they said, it would be a positive benefit.

"And what happened, Mr Speaker?

"At 3 o'clock in the morning on the last day of the session, Mr. Speaker, attorneys for the Elevated had the bill amended. When it was all too late the people of Charlestown learned that, instead of Rutherford avenue, the elevated structure was to be erected in Main street.

"We have waited fourteen years, Mr. Speaker, for justice from the Massachusetts Legislature. We want no special favors. We demand what belongs to us.

"And we recognize the rights of others We stand ready to pay the Elevated Company for every single dollar the structure has cost.

"What is the attitude of the Company in the situation?

"The Company says 'No' to the people of Charlestown. The Company agrees to help us if we will help the company to perpetual rights in the subway we never built We are not ready to make such an agreement, Mr Speaker Not as we want relief, depressing as has been our experience, we do not feel that we have any right to toll powers in hand and foot with rights in perpetuity)

Members find before them, today, a special report from the Boston Transit Commission on this project. I am going to say no more about that report than that it is extremely unfair.

"The Transit Commission appears to have relied upon the findings of experts'

"And who are these 'experts'"

"Gaston, Snow and Saltonstall

"Who are Gaston, Snow and Saltonstall?

"The distinguished attorneys for the Boston Elevated Street Railway Company.

"Who else does the Transit Commission refer you as 'experts?'

"Certain experts in real estate.

"Who?

"Meredith & Grew

"And who are Meredith & Grew? "Well, one of them is the brother-in-law of the present J. P. Morgan. J. P. Morgan is one of the owners of the Boston Elevated Railway.

"So much for that report. Mr Speaker Our situation in Charlestown is so pressing that we accept its figures as sound and honest. They may be inflated, Mr Speaker, but even so Charlestown is willing to accept them and, in order to get rid of the elevated structure, will accept the financial burden.

"I wish I could impress every member of this House with the fact that this is a vital issue to three important wards of the great City of Boston. As an example I may say to you that not long since a piece of property on our main street, assessed for $18,000, brought only $8,250 in the market.

"Another of our citizens seventeen years ago paid $9,000 for a piece of property over there The land was assessed then at $6,200.

Under the hammer, a short time since Mr Speaker, that piece of property, a respectable brick affair, was sold for $2,350.

"Property on our Main street is failing to please. No bank, no man, no corporation, will lend a cent on any piece of Charlestown realty along the line of this structure."

Representative Tague was followed with the closest and most respectful attention by that two-thirds of the House which had not fled to the corridors, or the Common, with the first suggestion that somebody was likely to say things not calculated to please the "powers that be" in the Elevated.

The opposition of Bothfeld of Newton was not impressive. The former Mayor was not so convincing as usual He concurred in the general proposition that the elevated structure is not so popular as a subway. He thought it "strange that public sentiment has changed so," recalling that twenty years ago certain Tremont street merchants were strongly opposed to having the surface cars taken out of that thoroughfare and sent into the subway. Also, he had heard that in three years New York is going to have forty-five miles additional of "elevated."

It appears to be certain that if the Charlestown movement is going to be headed off in this Legislature it is not likely to be done with oratory.

Representative Charles S. Lawler of Ward 24, one of a number of fine, clean, manly young Democrats who are helping wonderfully in the success of the Walsh administration, looked at the elevated-structure proposition from the other end of the town.

"That structure," Mr Lawler said, "has practically ruined Washington street all the way from Castle to Dudley streets I am one of the dissenting members of Metropolitan Affairs on that bill In the committee, I asked Vice President Sargent of the L if it was not likely that the Company would in time take a different attitude as to these structures. 'It would hope,' I said, 'if the Elevated Company could say to us that in ten years from now it would be ready to consider taking them down.'

"'Our position,' Mr. Sergeant said, 'will be the same ten years from now that it is today.'

"In other words, the Company will never remove these hideous things voluntarily

"We have lately heard a lot about 'Booming Boston.' I favor booming this city where I was born, and where I have spent my life. Mr. Speaker, I can conceive of no better way to boom Boston than to remove the elevated structure from Washington street, in the South End and in Roxbury, and from Main street in Charlestown

"From Castle street to Dudley street there has been no building of any importance since the structure went up. There will be none, Mr. speaker, until it comes down."

Mr McLaughlin of Charlestown and Mr Murray of Roxbury endorsed what had been said and the bill was substituted.

Granted that this bill gets out of the House, it is likely to be the subject of one of the hottest Senate battles in many years.

It provides that the elevated may remain as the Dorchester bridge but that a subway or subway shall be built from City Square to Sullivan Square or may provides for a tunnel to Dudley street

What to do with the structure in Atlantic avenue is left to the next General Court The Elevated from Dudley street to Forest Hills is not mentioned

And, finally, nothing whatever is to be done until the question has first been submitted to the voters of Boston at the next city election

Do you favor the removal of the elevated structure, and the substitution therefor of subways and tunnels, in the city of Boston?

Charlestown and the South End have won the first skirmish.

The battle is ahead.

Two trains every three minutes for 18 hours a day.
Then sleep?
Then the wrecking crew, with drills and bolts and compressed thingamajigs.

No slumber in Main Street.
Why don't they move?
Because in many cases this property, ruined by proximity to the elevated structure, represents their all.

No building has been erected in Main Street, Charlestown, since the elevated was built, 14 Years ago.—From Mr. Tague's speech in the House.

BRAVES LINE UP AGAINST WASHINGTON TODAY WITH WALTER JOHNSON IN BOX

BOSTON AMERICAN SPORTING NEWS

BAN JOHNSON DECLARES WAR TO THE BITTER END ON THE FEDERAL LEAGU

RED SOX RIPE FOR OPENING OF THE SEASON

By JACK CONWAY.

DAYTON, O., April 10.—Ray Collins will probably be the Red Sox pitching boy in the opening game of the season against the senators next Tuesday.

The big Vermonter was scheduled to pitch part of the game against Dayton today and if a contest is played Collins will board a rattler for Boston tonight in order to be up for the start of the season.

Collins is in the best condition of any of Carrigan's hurlers to be able to travel the full [illegible] at a merry clip the first day of the speed while his brothers are [illegible] to the queen's taste.

Mr. Walter Johnson, our national and college champ, will [illegible] the honors on the mound for the senators Tuesday, but in [illegible] any alcove on it's part may be has always experienced great success when pitted against the big Swede.

SPOKE AFTER WARM WEATHER.

George Foster will not journey to Cincinnati with the Fenway Park gang but will go to St Louis and spend a few days with his family.

Tris Speaker, Joe Wood and his wife, Joe Burns, president of the Lewiston New England League club and ex-Mayor Lynch of Lawrence, left for Boston at 7.45 o'clock last night and are due to arrive in the Hub late this evening.

Speaker has been suffering from a bad cold for the past ten days and it would be foolish for him to remain with the club as he would be unable to get in much beneficial work on account of the cold weather. If it is warm in Boston Spoke may do some light practicing at Fenway Park with Heinie Wagner and Joe Wood.

The Red Sox players have been having considerable amusement at the expense of Wood. It seems that the peerless pitcher's first name is not Joe after all.

SECRET OF WOOD'S NAME.

This news will be quite a surprise to Boston baseball fans who have fondly referred to Wood as Smoky Joe. Wood's initials are H. E. W., and he refuses to tell what the H. E. stands for.

Mrs. Wood of course is in the secret but she refused to inform the party what her husband's full name is.

President Lannin stated today that he would not take his club north so early next year, and asserted that he would probably arrange exhibition games with Memphis, Louisville, Cincinnati and Nashville for 1915, while he will give Indianapolis, Columbus and Dayton a wide berth.

Hugh Bedient, who had been suffering from a lame arm, is coming again and ready to take his regular turn in the box. Bedient is sure to be of great help to the Red Sox in the first part of the flag race with Joe Wood out of the game.

CINCINNATI SATURDAY.

The squad will leave for Cincinnati at 7.45 o'clock tomorrow morning. Carrigan will give his young hurlers a chance to perform while the Red Sox are playing in Garry Herrmann's town.

There is no truth to the report that the Red Sox are after Del Gainer of Detroit. Carrigan says that he has not made any efforts to secure the Tiger first baseman.

Defenders to Race on Coast in 1915

SAN FRANCISCO, April 10.—That at least one and possibly two of the aspirants for the honor of defending the America's Cup against the Shamrock IV. will race here against Sir Thomas Lipton's cup challenger in 1915, was the news brought to San Francisco today by J. R. Hanify on his return from a tour of Europe in the interests of the yachting bureau of the Panama Pacific Exposition.

Yankees After Tigers.

CINCINNATI, April 10.—Arthur Irwin, business manager of the New York American League team conferred with Hugh Jennings relative to the purchase of several Detroit youngsters.

Nine Prizes for Runners.

The William F. Reddish Club of Jamaica Plain road race will be held on the morning of April 2 and entries close with Mr Reddish, No 10 Creighton street, Jamaica Plain. Eight prises and a time prize are offered.

Pollous Downs Czneki.

Jim Pollous defeated John Czneki, the ex-Polish welterweight champion in the catch-as-catch-can wrestling match at the Grand Opera House winning in straight falls. Pollous took the first fall in thirty minutes and the second in fifteen minutes.

Cara II. for Percival.

David C. Percival has purchased from the estate of John [illegible] the auxiliary schooner Cara II. through the agency of John G. Alden. The schooner was originally built for him in 1908.

COBB GIVES TRAINING RULES

Written for the Boston American

By TY COBB.

There was some talk that one or two of "Connie" Mack's players did not stick close to the training rules in 1912, and that this lack of condition on the part of some of the stars had cost the club the league championship.

You will find it is true that any time a man with a reputation falls down during a season, the report will spread rapidly that he is not observing the rules of training.

As a matter of fact, I do not believe that any of the men on the Athletics who were supposed to have been careless about their condition broke the training rules to any extent.

It was just an off season for the team as a whole and some of the stars in particular. One man who was charged with training irregularities had just purchased his first automobile after being a member of the winning team in the world's series the previous Fall, and I have been told that he was inclined to stay out rather late in this at times.

But do not believe all you hear about a player running wild when he has a bad season. This is always the charge, and we must all have our off years.

Most Managers Permit Cigarettes.

Most managers do not forbid players to smoke cigarettes unless some of the men are overdoing it. Both the Giants and Athletics smoke cigarettes if they want to but Fred Clarke of the Pirates stopped his players from doing this last season on the theory that cigarettes were bad for the wind.

The elimination of them did not seem to speed the club up any, for it is the gossip of the game that the slowness of the Pirates is their big weakness.

Branch Rickey, the new manager of the St. Louis Browns, has introduced a novel system to induce his players to lay off cigarettes. He has arranged for the club to supply the players with cigars.

Any time one of the men desires to smoke, he goes to Rickey and asks him for a cigar.

Perhaps this feature has been added with the idea that more men will be inclined to go to that club willingly. It might be considered as almost a bribe. Also, I'll bet the friends of the players are well supplied.

Personally, I don't smoke cigarettes, but I usually smoke about three cigars a day in season and out, and they do not seem to hurt me at all.

Mathewson has told me that generally cuts out tobacco from the time he goes South for spring training until the season opens. This is just with the idea of giving himself a rest from it a year. He smokes pretty frequently during the baseball season, but mostly cigars.

My habits during the season are fairly regular. My rising hour is about 9.30 or 10, so that I am through my breakfast by 10.30 or 11. Then I generally loaf around the hotel and read the newspapers for an hour or so, unless I have some business to attend to in the city where we happen to be playing.

Cobb Found Golf Hurt His Batting.

For a time I used to rise a little earlier and play a round of golf, but I discovered that the Scotch game was hurting my batting, and I refuse to toy with anything that affects the old hitting, because that is my stock in trade.

By 2.30 each afternoon I am out at the ball park and in uniform and on the field by three where the team indulges in practice.

I never eat any lunch, as I feel that it makes me logey for the game, and it is important that I be in shape. That is my business—being in shape.

A few of the players take some light lunch, such as broth or milk and crackers, but they are the ones whose habit it is to rise earlier than I do, and they feel that they need the nourishment for strength.

None of the regulars eat heavily at noon. Sometimes we will get a bunker who runs his eye over the menu and thinks he sees great opportunities. He goes after the food and generally makes a bad impression at the ball park if he gets a chance to show.

As I have said before, many a youngster has eaten himself right out of the Big League.

As a matter of fact, I never eat any lunch even in the Winter when I am at my home in Augusta, where I retire and rise early.

On my hunting expeditions, I pass up lunch except perhaps for a sandwich, and I believe that the ordinary man would find himself in better physical shape if he would try the two-meal-a-day diet.

It is an easy one to get accustomed to, and it certainly makes a man enjoy his dinner.

WAR ON FEDS TO A FINISH SAYS JOHNSON

CHICAGO, April 10.—President Ban Johnson of the American League has declared war upon the Federal League following the signing of Pitcher Earl Hamilton, under contract to the St. Louis Browns, by the Kansas City Federals.

The American League will stop Hamilton if it takes every dollar in the treasury, said Johnson. He signed a most liberal three-year contract with the St. Louis Browns and nothing will be left undone until we check him in his willful violation of his contract.

Johnson left for Cincinnati after a conference with D. L. Reeves, secretary to John K. Tener, president of the National League.

JOHNSON TO HURL AGAINST BRAVES TODAY

By A. H. C. MITCHELL.

WASHINGTON, April 10.—The Braves arrived in the Capitol City of all kinds of pen only to learn that the great Walter Johnson is to pitch against them this afternoon.

Day by day the players under Stallings have been reading in the newspapers that Johnson has a sore arm, but come to find out the premier twirler has no sore arm at all. On the other hand, the Swede was never better in his life.

The Boston boys believe they can beat Johnson and they hail the fact that he is to pitch. Furthermore, Dick Rudolph, who left the team in Atlanta and came north to see his wife and baby and who joined his teammates today, declares that he will go in against Johnson and beat him.

GRIFF TO TRY OUT YOUNGSTER.

Johnson, it is announced, will pitch six innings against the Braves and then he will retire in favor of Shaw, a young pitcher, who comes from York, Pa. Griffith believes that Shaw is a world beater, but you don't have to pay any undue attention to Griff's remarks, as every man in his team is a world beater if you listen to Griff.

The old fox has been spending the entire Winter in Washington and he has been handing out a fine line of stuff for the baseball reporters here. And when the Boston players arrived from Baltimore they were filled full of stuff about Griff's team.

Ah, well, these winnings of pennants in the Winter and Spring time are very well, but it is just as well that the clubs go through with the schedules that have been arranged.

It was considerable of a pleasure to get out of Baltimore, where all one hears is Federal League stuff. It may be said that things look all right with the Feds at present.

BRAVES TRIM ORIOLES.

The Braves put up a fine game against the Orioles at Baltimore, winning the battle 5 to 1. Big Bill James did the twirling and acquitted himself in style. He allowed only three hits and issued but few passes.

The boys behind him fielded well and at bat slapped out enough safeties to put the game on ice early in the struggle. Mann, Evers, Schmidt, Maranville and Griffith came through when hits were needed.

The games here at Washington will practically wind up the training season of the Braves. They will play today and tomorrow and then take a night train for New York.

On Sunday Stallings will send a team up to Bridgeport, but most of the players will lie off in New York. Stallings plans to have his men practice on Monday either at the Polo Grounds or on Ebbetts' field in Brooklyn so that they may continue to be in shape for the opening of the season next Tuesday

Quimet and Lockwood Win Golf in London

LONDON, April 10.—Francis Ouimet, the American open golf champion, paired with Arthur G. Lockwood of Boston, today defeated the Marquis of Linlithgow and Lord Charles Hope on the Ranelagh links here in a foursome, which was played in a terrific gale of wind. Ouimet's score was 83.

The Americans won by five holes up and four to play. Ouimet's card out registered 40 strokes, while his mates scored 43.

As a result of the remarkable work of Ouimet since his arrival here, the odds on the national amateur championship have shifted greatly. Before the Boston youth arrived betting was 2 to 1 that no American would win or be runner up. Today the wagering was 7 to 5, with few takers.

CASPER HERE TO PLAN TOUR OF BULGAR QUEEN

NEW YORK, April 10. — William Casper, personal representative of Queen Eleanor of Bulgaria, arrived here on the liner Imperator to make final arrangements for the visit of the Queen to the United States. The Queen, he said, will sail late in May and will visit all the large cities as far West as Chicago. She will remain in this country about five weeks.

Mr. Casper, who was born in the United States, has been a resident of Bulgaria for many years. He is a convictor for the Bulgarian government and a close friend of King Ferdinand and Queen Eleanor's wife.

"The Queen is anxious to visit the United States as a student," he said. "She desires to study the methods employed by the United States in handling immigrants. She is also interested in hospitals and the training of nurses.

Mrs. Attilio Morosini, sister-in-law of Mrs. Giulia Morosini Werner, who has, with Mr. Morosini, adopted the name of "Moro" to avoid, as they say, the publicity connected in recent years with the Morosinis.

NEW YORK, April 10.—Panic-stricken by the discovery that letters, important in her contemplated separation suit, are missing, Mrs. Giulia Morosini Werner has taken steps to obtain a permit to carry a revolver.

The loss of letters has indefinitely delayed legal steps by Mrs. Werner against her husband. The letters, said to have been written by other women, were discovered by the ex-policeman's wife soon before she put detectives on guard at Elmhurst to keep her husband out.

Dispatches from Reno said the sunned only twenty minutes of the court's time.

The killing of a man by an automobile in Newark revealed at Montclair, N. J., today that the couple known as A. C. Moro are really Mr. and Mrs. Attilio F. Morosini, brother and sister-in-law of the heroine of the siege now being staged at Riverdale-on-the-Hudson.

Mrs. Morosini admitted their relationship to Mrs. Giulia Morosini Werner, and explained that her husband had abbreviated his name to avoid any notoriety that might attach to his family through connection with the more widely known children of the late Giovanni Morosini.

OLD RIVALS TO SETTLE SCORES AT CAMBRIDGE

By RINGSIDE.

Freddy Daly of Jamaica Plain and Johnny Gallant of Chelsea now that they have been signed up for a fight, will be able to settle a long-standing argument at the University A. C., Cambridge, Monday evening. These two boxers, who are about as good as any of the local lightweight crop, have been anxious to have a go for quite some time, and the result should be plenty of action in the Cambridge ring. Daly is anxious to have a shot at Eddie Murphy, and if he gets a decisive win over Gallant, the South Boston star will have a mighty tough job refusing to give him a chance, but his road will be rough, for Gallant is a rugged boxer, who is generally going fast at the finish of a fight as he was at the beginning.

The new middleweight champion, Al McCoy, who startled the boxing world by hanging a defeat on George Chip the other evening, is more or less a Boston product, as he got all his knowledge of the game while acting as a janitor of the old American A. C. in the West End. McCoy's whole name is Al Rudolph, and he was so hard up for money those days that he used to appropriate the ring as a bed and take chances to gather spare change fighting prelims, though he knew nothing whatever about the fine points of the game. Now he seems to be in line for a good fat picking, unless he meets with a sudden reverse as did his opponent lately in New York. It will be remembered that one J. Johnson, who reached the top of the heavyweight column, and is at present more or less well known, started his fistic career in much the same fashion as the new middleweight. It is to be hoped that McCoy will not follow the dark person's example in winding up his ring affairs.

There is a possibility that Johnny Dundee, who boxes Matty Baldwin at the Athletic opening Tuesday, will be put on at the club later in a bout with Johnny Kilbane for the featherweight title. The pair have met twice with very little to give or take either way and another battle would pack the house. The Philadelphia club, which had the two matched and then lost out when the champion suffered his attack of tonsilitis, is again on the trail and will bend every effort to get the two little stars again. A new York club is also after Dundee to match him with Willie Ritchie.

John Muncie of Charlestown and Al Shubert of New Bedford, who had quite a sizzling time of it at the University A. C. a week ago last night, the headliners in a meeting of the Neptune A. Shubert, however, has several engagements billed ahead, and Henry Meyers, the tough little Charlestown battler, may be put against Muncie instead. While every team may be selected—provided always, the show runs—it will furnish plenty of fun the lovers of fighting the fans like to watch.

• • •

Mickey Brown of Malden, who made his reappearance in the ring a short time ago after a long layoff, is being rated four a number of bouts over in Philadelphia and New York. This fast bantam showed in both cities a year ago and made a decided hit there in fact he was one of the best drawing cards among little fighters. After a month or so away, Brown will return and try to land some good scraps at the local clubs.

LIE GIVEN TO BOND CRITICS BY MANSFIELD

State Treasurer Mansfield, in a red-hot statement today, passed the "lie direct" to the critics of his recent over-the-counter sale of State bonds. The treasurer called the attacks upon him unfair and said they were "unpaired." His statement gave the details of the bond issue. He said:

"The presentation to the Legislative Committee on Rules by Representative Hull's bill calling upon the treasurer to disclose all the details about the bond sale is merely the latest form which the inspired attack upon me has taken. Neither Mr Hull nor any person representing him has ever asked me for one word of information about the bond sale, and, if he had he would have known that it was entirely unnecessary to present any such measure to that committee.

"I had already promised, as representative of the press can testify, to give out the detailed statement just as soon as the bonds had been delivered and the tabulation could be made, and I gave to him an expanded statement all the information which Mr Hull asked for, excepting the names of the bond purchasers.

DECLINES TO GIVE NAMES.

"I decline to give these names. As far as I personally am concerned I have no objection to making them known, but unless the purchasers themselves authorize me to divulge their names, neither Representative Hull nor any other person is entitled to them.

"There have been many malicious insinuations from various sources, indulged in mostly by certain false prophets, who declared with great confidence that the proposed bond sale would never be a success, and that I would have to beg the bond dealers to take the bonds off my hands at a loss, that I only succeeded in selling the bonds by coercing banks which had State deposits, and the insinuation has been made that banks were threatened that I would withdraw their deposits unless they purchased bonds and that many other banks bought bonds because they were fearful that they would lose their deposits if they didn't. Furthermore, if any bank which purchased bonds is displeased with its bargain, and will frankly say so, I think I can find purchasers who will take them off its hands at the price which it paid for them.

"SELFISH INTERESTS."

"There are a great many financial interests which would willingly accept all the credit and the fair name of the Commonwealth in spite and in revenge for the loss to them of the profits that otherwise they might have made, and for what they insolently deem an unwarranted encroachment upon their own divine prerogatives.

"I am fully aware of the strong influences that were brought to bear to defeat the bond sale, and no man in Massachusetts but me can ever realize how keenly and stubbornly my efforts to sell the bonds were resisted by the same unpatriotic and selfish hostile interests."

Plan State Meeting to Aid Home Rule

At a meeting of the executive committee of the United Irish League of Boston it was voted to hold a State conference at Chipman Hall, Tremont Temple, April 25, to aid Home Rule. Those present in the room already raised $1,110 of the $5,000 pledged by this State.

All the officers of the different league branches throughout Massachusetts, as well as individuals prominent in the work for Home Rule will be invited to attend. At that meeting arrangements will be made for some sort of celebration to be held in this city about the time the Home Rule bill is to pass its final reading in Parliament.

STEFFENS AND WOODS MAKE I. W. W. TRUCE

NEW YORK April 10—Police Commissioner Woods and Lincoln Steffens, the latter talking for the Ferrer School, established a protocol yesterday afternoon in the matter of the proposed Anarchist-I. W. W.-Unemployed meeting to be held in Union square tomorrow afternoon. "Wild Joe" O'Carroll and other wordy I. W. W.s had predicted there would be more doing than mere language punctuated with cuss words at this meeting. There were sinister suggestions of "bloodshed."

It was for the purpose of easing off the situation that Mr. Steffens, who is a Socialist and an ardent believer in free speech, called on Commissioner Woods. The latter said he had not had time to go into the situation carefully because he had been police commissioner only one day, but he was willing to smoke the pipe of peace so far as tomorrow's meeting was concerned, provided the Anarchist-I. W. W.-Unemployed contingent contented themselves with the spilling of language and did not incite to riot.

Mr Steffens assured the commissioner that the attendants at the meeting would police themselves and that everything would be conducted in the most orderly fashion. But among those present will be a sufficient number of policemen to stop anything that may look like disorder.

"A Far Country"

Winston Churchill's latest and best novel is based on the biblical quotation concerning the prodigal son: "and took his journey into a far country; and there he wasted his substance in riotous living." That gives some hint of the tremendous scope, tensity and human interest of the author's motif. This story will be the sensation of 1914. It is just beginning in

287 BANKS GAVE BOSTON VOTE AS RESERVE CITY

WASHINGTON, April 10.—Out of the 341 national banks in New England which voted on the regional reserve bank question, 287 favored Boston as the centre for the New England district. New York was favored by 106.

The fact is disclosed by the poll that sixty-four out of the seventy-one national banks of Connecticut that expressed any preference at all voted for the selection of New York. This meant that they preferred to do business with the proposed regional reserve bank at New York City than with Boston.

WIFE SETTLES GIRL'S SUIT BY PAYING $1,650

Instead of prosecuting her $10,000 Alleged alienation of affection case against Miss Luck Luckowits of No. 14 Johnson court Brockton, Mrs Caroline Williams of No 264 Broadway, South Boston, has agreed that Miss Luckowits shall receive $1,650 in settlement of a suit Miss Luckowits brought to recover money loaned to Joseph Williams.

The suits were an outgrowth of a shooting affair on the night of June 27, 1912, when Williams came to Brockton to see Miss Luckowits. He had opened a saloon in South Boston with money alleged to have been secured from Miss Luckowits. After a short quarrel over finances Williams shot Miss Luckowits and then killed himself.

Later Mrs Williams sued Miss Luckowits for $10,000, claiming alienation of her husband's affections. Miss Luckowits sued for $1,000 for money and interest.

The two suits were listed for trial in the Suffolk County Superior Court, but by the terms of the agreement Mrs Williams agrees to withdraw her suit, while the $1,650 will be paid from her husband's estate.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

I HAVE often wished that I had larned musick as a boy, sed Pa. I feel sure that if I had larned musick I wud be abel now to rite sum grate songs. I git splendid ideas for the words, but not knowing anything about musick I cant compose any melodies for the words & so I am left up in the air. A song is no good without the music as well as the words, said Pa.

Certingly not, sed Ma, but there are a lot of grate composers that are always glad to find sum poet to work with. Why doant you talk them wunderful words of yures & go to see sum composer?

They never seem to get my idea, sed Pa. Thare musick does not seem to be equal to my words, or maybe if it is equal it is not sutabel, anyway I have nevver had any luck working in with a composer. That is why I wish I were musickal. I have ritten the words of a song here wich I think wud set the whole wurld talking if I cud git the right kind of a air to it. Do you want to hear it?

Do I want to hear it? sed Ma. Of course I want to hear it. You dear geenyus, you, sed Ma. If the song maiks any munny can I have half of it?

Indeed you can, sed Pa. The naim of this song is I'll Never Wed No Actor, & this is the way the words goes:

In a fair New England vil-lage at the clos of one bright day,
A tall and hansom actor met a vil-lage girl named Mae.
We leave the town to-morrow, the actor sed to her;
Go with me as my littel wife, ne'er from my side to stir.
The village maiden listened to his pro-posal verse,
& then this conversanshun with him she did converse:

CHORUS.

I'll never wed no actor,
Your proposal is a joak;
I'm jest a simpel village gurl,
& still I know yure brook.
The Movies put you out of work,
You hate work anyhow;
I'll never wed no actor.
Not the way the time is now.

Well, sed Pa, what do you think of it.

I doant like to any until I have herd the second verse, sed Ma.

The second verse isent finished yet, sed Pa, but I am going to tell how the actor went away & married a waitress in another town & how the village gurl which turned him down married the president of the village bank.

I cant say that I see much to the song, sed Ma, thare isent any real hart interest in it, & thare isent much of a story in it. All it tells is that a gurl refused to marry a actor & these hard times, sich merely shows a littel good judgment on the gurl's part, Pa.

Well, sed Pa, of course if you doant like it I will go no farther with it, but I had hoped to make sum munny so I cud give you a nice present.

I guess you better wait till you rite sumthing better than this, sed Ma, & Saterday you can give me half of yure salary insted.

Suggested Compromise

Change of weather may have accounted for the mood that seized old Finick as he entered the principal hotel of the little country town.

Carefully he chose his seat, leaned comfortably back, and beckoned the elderly waiter.

"Breakfast, sir?"

"Yes, and two eggs," slowly answered O. F. "I want one fried on one side, and the other fried on the other."

The waiter's eyes narrowed as he gazed at the unperturbed old face, but, although puzzled, he withdrew, to pass on the order.

A moment later the kitchen bell rang furiously.

"Beg pardon, sir," said the waiter, "but would you mind repeating your order. I'm afraid I didn't get it quite correctly."

"Certainly. I want two eggs, one of them fried on one side and the other on the other."

Into the dim realms of the kitchen vanished the waiter, determination on his brow, and returned five minutes later, red in the face and evidet ly flustered.

"Excuse me, sir," he said insinuatingly, "but the cook and I have had a few words about your order. Would you mind having those eggs scrambled, sir?"

"NOW who on earth but a human would need any help at love-making on a day like this!" grumbled Cupid, rolling lazily out of a cluster of violets.

His complaint did seem justified, for Spring was never more maddeningly sweet.

Like a humming bird, he darted off, and when he reached Orchid's home, hovered over it, looking keenly down.

Orchid went over to the 'phone. "I'll just call up Ruth," she mused.

Cupid flashed down.

He gently tickled the nose of the little telephone operator with a May blossom scent.

She looked around guiltily, and stole out to the door.

In that moment Cupid put his chubby hand out, muffling the bell. Then he deliberately signalled—not Ruth, but Bob. "Now I wash my hands of you!" he exclaimed.

Five seconds later he was busy with the charming affairs of a pair of young swallows.

By WEBSTER DENISON

A rippling laugh greeted this rebuke.

"Don't, please, Mr. Scott," the girl said. "I have seen some of it. I suffer from a sense of humor and sometimes I laugh right out—in the most inopportune places."

"Don't think I understand you," the millionaire commented icily.

"Oh, you don't have to. Don't worry. I won't walk in on you without knocking. Let's save a lot of waste explaining. You have a private—a very private secretary; I do the work."

"Some of it."

"Oh, a great deal of it, Mr. Scott. Especially the VERY private letters."

"Well, aren't you satisfied? What do you want, a title?"

The irrepressible Miss Wiggins affected a mock grandiose pose.

"I have one—stenographer extraordinary to Crane."

Her affronetry amused the importer despite himself.

"You picked it yourself ," he laughed, "everybody in this world picks his or her own title—and his or her own station. You don't have to be a stenographer." He smiled up at her in his jaunty way. "You could be a correspondent, an amanuensis or a secretary—those are all the same, but all very different from being a stenographer."

SHE KNEW.

"Utterly different," she assented suavely. "several kind-hearted gentlemen have tried to elevate me, but I'm still a stenographer."

"No accounting for tastes. There are still many people primitive to think that the best way to get things is to work for them. Some people fly airships, some become undertakers, and here and there an old-fashioned girl pounds out her destiny on a typewriter, and that's all she puts between herself and being hungry. Why, I knew a girl once—but say, young woman, I'm a busy man! Run along now, please and take your troubles to Mr. Crane. Really, you know, you annoy me—and you're too smart. I've discharged girls for being less smart than you are."

"But you won't discharge me because you think I know too much—about your private secretary. Don't—let that worry you. Fire me and your secret is just as safe as if I remained in your employ. Why don't you fire me, Mr. Scott?"

The importer threw up his hands and laughed.

"You are so damned insolent, I like you! Now, will you please get out of here and —stop thinking!"

"Yes, I'm going," she said as she started to the door, "but if you won't let a woman talk, for heaven's sake, let her think."

The door closed quickly a second time after Miss Wiggins' exit, and Scott, expectant of another intrusion, looked up and saw his private secretary. He brightened and spoke a cheery 'good morning.'

TORTURING THOUGHTS

"I hope you are feeling fine and fit today. It looks like a lot of work and a short luncheon."

She quirked inwardly at the word, but passed it by with a formal greeting and took her place at her machine.

When she was out of Scott's presence, Gertrude's new found happiness mitigated the tortures she had endured at the importer's hands, and she had determined, without any definite idea of the future, to continue as his amanuensis. To herself she acknowledged a complete surrender of her heart to Jack, but she had not acknowledged it to him, and she had not breathed a word of his declarations to her mother.

It was not altogether an unselfish regard for Jack that prompted her silence, either. During this month she had been in this office, under the efficient tutelage of Scott and Miss Wiggins, something of the sopnism of the older girl had imparted itself to Gertrude. She wasn't so optimistic as Jack regarding their romance. She was no longer misled by Scott's protestations of paternal care. She knew him now for what he was and she knew his unvented interest in her would vanish if he thought it was being shared so seriously by his stepson.

She had concluded that her clandestine meetings with Jack were the only ones she could have now. The fact that he loved her and was hear her was something and she must content herself with that.

If Gertrude had but known it, the very thing on which she relied to ameliorate her trials in the private office did but accentuate them. Mere rectitude is a strong defender of chastity, but love is a more zealous one. What had been repulsive before was soon to become unbearable, and she had not long to wait to learn the truth.

AN IDEA

For a half-hour Scott continued reading his letters and jotting down data. When he had finished he leaned back and looked at his secretary, who had sat staring into space across the keys of her typewriter. His contemplation of the girl seemed to inspire him with an idea, for he quickly pressed the button that summoned his chief aide.

"Crane," he said sharply, "Miss Wiggins was in here a moment ago."

"Yes, sir."

"She says she is out of work. What's the matter, are you all taking a holiday out there?"

"No, sir."

"Well, Crane, I don't know what's the matter with you—any deaths in the family, or—births?"

"No, sir."

"Well, whatever it is you've got to get it out of your head. Now I've talked about all I'm going to on this matter. As nearly as anybody can conduct affairs out there, you are conducting them and I want to tell you for the last time that this is the office of the president of 'Scott & Son'—his private office. This promiscuous running in and out has got to stop. I've spoken to Miss Wiggins and others concerned, but it doesn't seem to do any good. I can't very well lock the door because of the presence of this young woman. Now I'm going to put it up to you. Either you will impress it on the hoi polloi out there that I am entitled to some consideration, or I'll get somebody who will.

"I don't care anything about the hall boy, either. He's supposed to announce anybody that wants access to this room, but he doesn't do it. I can't be quarreling with office boys and I don't intend to. Just remember that the next person that comes into this room without being properly announced, you're going to answer for it."

"Yes, sir—does that—include Mr. Jack?"

"Never mind Jack. I'll take care of him. You look out for the rest. That's all. Never saw anything to equal it," he mumbled as Crane made a hasty withdrawal; "that dissertation may gain us a few minutes of privacy, so if you're ready, Miss Meyer, you may take a little dictation."

ANOTHER INSULT

He gave her a half-dozen letters, and she went back to her machine. She had transcribed one of them and was making good progress on another when Scott got up and came toward her. He leaned over her shoulder with a smirk of approval.

"My!" he complimented, "you are improving. I don't believe Miss Wiggins or anyone else could write any better or faster than you now."

His praise was gratifying, and unconsciously she turned and smiled up at him. Instantly he stopped, seized her hand and pressed his lips to hers. She managed to get to her feet, and in the struggle the perfect letter that had merited such praise was brushed to the door and trampled under foot.

"Let me go! Please let me go!" she cried, wriggling in his embrace. But she was powerless.

"I can't—I can't," he murmured. "You're the loveliest when you're fighting, and you shan't deny me."

She bent back her head till the words were almost throttled.

"Please! Please! Someone might come in!"

Someone did come in, and Scott managed to release her just in time. With rare presence he stooped quickly and picked up the soiled letter and crumpled it in his hand. Terse and censoring tones followed fast on his amorous pleading.

"And be sure to address that letter to New Zealand, not Newfoundland, miss. You'll have to exercise more care."

He stepped back to his desk and the astonished junior partner, who had entered unceremoniously, after a furtive look at Gertrude, came forward and laid a cablegram before his stepfather. Scott, who had regained his seat, snatched the message up and jumped to his feet. His fist banged upon the desk.

"This is a fine state of affairs!" he exclaimed. "That Paris man is asleep or full of absinthe, like all those frog-eaters. By jove, this has got to stop! Crane! Crane!" he called, and rushed to the hall.

WORDS OF COMFORT.

In the moment of Scott's pseudo outburst Gertrude sat watching him with an agonized look of helplessness and despair. Her face was distorted by her efforts to maintain a deception as adequate as Scott's. But as he rushed out she pressed her handkerchief to her face and dropped her head to her desk, giving vent to pent-up tears. She felt again the pressure of arms, but it was a gentle, tender embrace from which she did not shrink.

What, Mother, is meant by saying there is a difference between a mother's and father's sympathy?

A father's sympathy for a child in pain, my dear, depends upon if he ever had a pain like it, but a mother's sympathy doesn't depend on anything.

What, Mother, is Sympathy?

It is that sentiment, Child, the expression of which gives a neighbor the right to visit the home of the bereft and poke into every corner.

What, Mother, is meant by "one is as wise as an owl"?

It means, Child, that one does his carousing at night when there is no one awake to see, and looks wise and superior in the daytime.

What, Mother, is meant by "An odor of sanctity"?

It is an odor, Little One, that used to attach to one's Sunday clothes, but that no longer exists these days when Sunday clothes are gotten out a half-dozen times during the week.

Is modesty, Mother, a lost virtue?

Oh, no, Little One. Have you never noticed dry goods advertisements of "Corset covers, petticoats, night gowns, etc?" The "etc." proves that modesty is still the prevailing American trait.

What, Mother, is meant by "a thorough misunderstanding"?

It is that sentiment, Little One, that exists between the hen and the woman who comes out to shoo it. No better example of thorough misunderstanding exists.

What, Mother, is meant by that common expression, "Ah, times have changed!"

I can explain best, Little One, with an illustration: A generation ago a father felt privileged to open the letters received by his daughter of nineteen. Nowadays he doesn't dare if she is over seven.

A Message to Thin, Weak, Scrawny Folks

An Easy Way to Gain 10 to 30 lbs. of Solid, Healthy, Permanent Flesh

Thin, nervous, undeveloped men and women everywhere are glad to say, "I can't understand why I do not get fat. I eat plenty of good, nourishing food." The reason is just this: You cannot get fat, no matter how much you eat, unless your digestive organs assimilate the fat-making elements of your food instead of passing them out through the body as waste.

What is needed is a means of gently urging the assimilative functions of the stomach and intestines to absorb the oils and fats and hand them over to the blood, where they may reach the starved, shrunken, run-down tissues and build them up. The thin person's body is like a dry sponge—eager and hungry for the fatty materials and dainty feeding deprived by the failure of the alimentary canal to take them from the food. The lack of fat in the blood is responsible for the shrunken glands and scrawny appearance of fat folks. Scientific chemists have recently discovered certain concentrated fat-making elements which assimilate here and abroad. Take a little Sargol four times daily and note how soon these four sheets fill out and rolls of firm, healthy flesh are deposited over your body. Sargol is sold by druggists everywhere at $1 a large case. Or you can get it from the laboratories of Sargol on receipt of price. Are not satisfied with the gain in weight it produces, as stated by the guarantee in each package, it is immediately, easy to take and highly efficient.

Caution: While Sargol has produced remarkable results in overcoming nervous disorders and general sickness in cases, it should not be taken unless you are willing to gain ten pounds or more for it is a wonderful flesh builder.—ADVERTISEMENT.

FORBES URGES FEDERAL HELP FOR POOR BOYS

By B. C. FORBES, Business Editor.

Most human beings born into this world have to find a job.

Those who have no "pull" often encounter difficulty in doing it. The rich man can easily place his son.

* * *

But what of the poor man and the poor man's sons? They are the ones who need consideration. They are the ones to whom a helping hand may mean much.

* * *

Shall this helping hand be extended? Or shall it be refused?

The whole system—or, rather, lack of system—in connecting employes and employers in this country is a reflection at once upon our ingenuity and our humanity. European nations have set us an example in this direction. Governmental employment bureaus accomplish valuable work abroad. Certain municipalities also render invaluable service in the same field.

* * *

The United States government cannot afford long to lag behind.

* * *

State administrations can also aid—and, doubtless, will aid sooner or later in future. Already the worker is receiving some attention. He is destined to receive more.

* * *

This newspaper has been advocating co-operation between business and educational authorities to secure desirable positions for the brightest pupils in each school WHO ARE FORCED BY CIRCUMSTANCES TO GO OUT AND EARN MONEY ON FINISHING THE PRIMARY COURSE. Through the efforts of the New York Chamber of Commerce, the Merchants' Association and the New York Board of Education have taken up the advisability and feasibility of placing the most worthy poor boys under the family financial reasons, to go farther than the public school.

Does not that strike you as a good thing to do? Wouldn't you like to know that if your son did well at school he would be offered, on leaving, a situation worth having?

* * *

Yet a sub-committee of the New York Board of Education reports that to go so "is essentially undemocratic." Happily the opinion of two persons—is not final. The larger body is likely to take a larger view of the problem.

* * *

"Undemocratic" to help a poor lad to find suitable employment when thrown into the world!

It may be "undemocratic" to pay able-bodied men who are out of work they are compelled to send their boys—and even their girls—into workshops at a cruelly early age.

* * *

It may be "undemocratic" to have children of sixteen, eighteen and even fourteen toiling with their hands instead of having their young heads attended to by the educational authorities.

* * *

It may be "undemocratic" to have at this time of day the blame poured upon thousands of fathers and mothers in need of the few dollars that their immature offspring can earn on entering their teens.

Yes, all that may be "undemocratic."

* * *

But who that has known poverty, who that has gone through the ordeal, who that is confronted with the need of sending their sons and daughters out into an inhospitable world will call it "undemocratic" to make the path smoother for the tender feet to tread? Who that knows these bitter experiences will throw cold water on plans to find congenial positions for the brave young breadwinners?

* * *

"Undemocratic"—rough!

If democracy means not mutual co-operation, if it means not each extending a friendly hand to all, if it means not brotherliness, if it means not the greatest good of the greatest number, then what on earth does it mean?

* * *

Call the social conditions that force boys and girls to assist in the family support "undemocratic" if you will, but if you have those conditions, don't blink them, don't do nothing to remedy them, don't sit idly by and see the young sacrificed from the pillar to post as they trudge the streets in a disheartening search for work.

"Undemocratic," it to help them to find an opening where talent will be rewarded, where the environment will not be poisonous, where the employers will regard them as human beings and not like flesh and blood as themselves rather than as bits of machinery to be worked to the limit?

* * *

Had a committee of the people, had poor people, made the report, they would have called such efforts "undemocratic."

It will be "essentially undemocratic" if the educational authorities and representative business citizens refuse to turn their hands to aid the poor, impecunious voyagers when first cast adrift on the rough, choppy, chilly sea of life.

* * *

It is unthinkable that the final decision will call such humane action "undemocratic."

Auto News

By J. C. KERRISON.

Better than an eighty-mile-an-hour average is freely predicted since the Indianapolis motor speedway when Hoosier automobilerom will begin its four-teen-hour grind of doping out the next 500-mile motor marathon from the rails guarding the two-and-one-half mile vitrified brick oval. The national record of 78.7 miles an hour will be assailed by the classiest high speed talent of two continents, which means that almost probable that the winning car will travel faster than any machine has ever traveled before in 500 miles.

H. C. Bradfield, field advertising manager of the Cole Motor Car Company and right hand man of Homer McKee, is taking a flying trip through the East. He arrived in Boston yesterday and had the pleasure of greeting many of his old-time friends. Mr. Bradfield earlier in his career was a shining member of the local newspaper fraternity, but seeing the signs of the day graduated from the newspaper field into the automobile industry, in which he has made a great success. Mr. Bradfield says that he cannot understand why anybody in the automobile business should talk "hard times." There has not been able to discover any signs of the same. He finds there is every indication of a successful season, as his company, as well as many others, is away ahead in the sales line of any previous year. He is optimistic on the outlook and a good tonic for those who feel otherwise.

Keep Looking Young

It's Easy—If You Know Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets.

The secret of keeping young—is to feed young—to do this you must watch your liver and bowels—there's no need of having a sallow complexion—dark rings under your eyes—pimples—a billious look on your face—dull eyes with no sparkle.

Your doctor will tell you ninety per cent. of all sickness comes from inactive liver and bowels. Dr. Edwards, a well-known physician in Ohio, perfected a vegetable compound mixed with olive oil to act on the liver and bowels, which he gave to his patients for years.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets, the substitute for calomel, are gentle in their action, yet always effective. They bring about that exact condition of mind, that natural buoyancy which comes only when the liver is working right and nerves are strengthened by proper digestion. You will know Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets by their olive color and 25c per box. The Olive Tablet Company, Columbus, Ohio.

ARTHUR WOODS RULES POLICE WITH A SMILE

Arthur H. Woods has settled into the traces as police commissioner of New York, and his friends in Boston are reviving recollections of his boyhood in Cohasset and on Beacon Hill. He is a Harvard man and a Bostonian by "instincts and training."

In reminiscences it came to light that his close friendship with former President Roosevelt, which has brought him into New York prominence, came about through Mr. Roosevelt's sons, who were at one time pupils under Mr. Woods.

Woods was brought up in Cohasset and at No. 2 Walnut street, Beacon Hill. His father was J. W. Woods. Arthur Woods studied in Boston, then went to Harvard, and upon graduation went to Groton. But at Cohasset and in Boston he had won a reputation as "the boy with a smile."

"He would go into a fight smiling—and come out smiling," one old friend said today.

He was an athlete youth, six feet tall and strong in proportion—boating, swimming, tramping all Summer long, around his father's place on Jerusalem road, Cohasset.

While he was a teacher at Groton, Kermit and Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., were pupils. They became friends; and Mr. Woods met the former President. Under Commissioner Bingham—a Roosevelt appointee—Woods learned the police situation in New York. Later he went to the Philippines with Mr. Taft.

Woods comes of a ministerial family. His brother is a pastor; his sister a ministers' wife. But young Woods is—quoting his friend again—"cool, friendly, smiling chap, with steel nerve and the head to make good."

Murray in Plea for Drunkards' Colony

King Gustave Rests After Operation

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, April 10.—A bulletin was issued from the bedside of King Gustave of Sweden, who was operated on for ulceration of the stomach, said: "The King slept several hours and then experienced the usual discomforts following an operation. The condition is as satisfactory as possible."

Sister of Jeffries Faces Purse Thief

LOS ANGELES, April 10.—Mrs. Almeda F. Boyer, sister of James J. Jeffries, the former heavyweight champion of the world, appeared in Justice Summerfield's Court to prosecute Louis Decker, charged with snatching $18 from her purse in a downtown department store. The case is continued.

Minor Sues to Get Back Poker Losses

PORTLAND, Me., April 10.—Leland M. Chute of East Holden, a minor, has brought suit to recover $350 from Samuel Goldstein and Joseph Rosenberg. He alleges he played poker with them at Yarmouth and lost the money.

"Thanks, noble comrades, she's mine!"

His—the very thought made her shudder.

The most beautiful girl in Bergmen's Beauty Show, famed where white lights and wine sparkled, sought after by millionaires, finally married to one. Her cup of joy would seem to brim over.

But life since she left the little up-state village had been distasteful. Only when her boy-husband, discovered, was left with naught but a craving for alchohol, did a tinge of love come.

She faced her problem, and the telling makes the most vivid picture of Broadway that ever came from colorful pen.

Making It Easy for Hostile Nations to Attack Us

Mr. Wilson's Policy Places the Panama Canal at the Disposal of Our Enemies in Time of War

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company

Representative Underwood, one of the wise and able House leaders who have opposed President Wilson's Canal policy, calls to the attention of the American people the very great danger of the programme Mr. Wilson is trying to force Congress to carry out.

"The repeal of the bill," said Mr. Underwood, "will not prevent the fortification of the canal, BUT IT WILL PREVENT US FROM USING THE GUNS ON THE VESSELS OF ANOTHER NATION IF THAT NATION SHOULD BE AT WAR WITH US.

"WE WOULD HAVE TO SIT IDLY BY AND ALLOW BATTLESHIPS OF A NATION WITH WHICH WE WERE AT WAR TO PASS THROUGH THE CANAL TO ATTACK OUR ATLANTIC OR PACIFIC COASTS, BECAUSE THE CANAL WOULD BE NEUTRAL AND OUR FORTIFICATIONS USELESS."

A beautifully patriotic policy is one which would thus rob this country of the right to interfere with vessels bound East or West to ravage our coasts.

In the history of the world, "national honor" has never been carried to quite such a ridiculous extreme.

Of course, it would be inconvenient for Japan, if she desired to send a fleet to attack Boston or New York, to send it clear around Cape Horn.

Having this inconvenience in mind, we say to her:

"Why trouble to make this long journey, when at the end of it you might find an American fleet ready to fight you? Get your ships together and you can take them through the Panama Canal with far less trouble and expense, and you will have a much better chance of finding some important port undefended. The Canal will be neutral, and, of course, with our ideas of 'national honor' we shall be compelled to send you safely through, so that you will be put to the least trouble in destroying New Orleans, or Savannah, or New York."

To Mr. Wilson's friends, the British, we should be compelled to say:

"It is a long and weary voyage around the Horn, or through the Straits of Magellan. We fear your vessels could never reach Los Angeles or San Francisco on their errand of destruction without meeting a well armed American fleet, if they had to take that route.

"Far better that you rendezvous them in some British harbor, say Jamaica, and come straight through the Canal. If you assemble your vessels quietly we shall have little warning, and it is almost certain that you will not be interfered with on the way.

"Welcome to our Canal. As Mr. Page would say, 'We derive our greatest pleasure from the fact that it will be of more use to you in a war against us than it will be to us.'"

Mr. Underwood, as you know, always knows what he is talking about. He is not given to bluster, or to seeing imaginary dangers.

The menace which he has called to the notice of his fellow Americans is a real menace.

Of what use would all our fortifications be if ships of all nations, WARSHIPS INCLUDED, are to be admitted to the Canal on equal terms?

They would doubtless be decorative, and the batteries would be interesting to the officers of hostile ships who might choose to take a little stroll ashore while their ships, stripped for action, were being slowly towed through the Canal.

But we should be bound not to use them, and they would avail nothing to interfere with the progress of a powerful fighting force, intent on razing our cities and killing the soldiers and citizens who defended them.

We hear much talk of national honor from Mr. Wilson, and from the railroad lobby which is fighting against free tolls.

We never heard that national honor consisted in opening our coasts to the attack of foreign fleets, or of spiking our own guns.

The Debt of Panama

By LILIAN LAUFERTY

WE sundered height from sister height until the land was cut in twain,
We lifted the level of valley up that main might flow to distant main,
With girdled steel and mortar drain we fought the seeping of the rain,
When other lands had tried and failed we raised a daring Titan crew,
Our toll was work—why pay again that equal all earth's ships pass through?
For when we toiled to build and hew, we paid our tax ere it was due.

Our labor joined the East and West—the storm-tossed and the peaceful sea,
We cut the hemisphere in twain that ocean highway there might be.
And when the earth sends argosy, shall it not gladly pay the fee?

And we—who did a whole world's work—shall not our cargoes free ride through?
Ye toiled in fever, chill and murk. Now other nations pay their due.
Prepaid our toll when sluice-ways grew, our cancelled debt the world may view.

Our tax is pa'd at Panama—or fifty thousand wrought in vain—
When cuts and deep-dredged waterways drew main anear to distant main.
At Gatun Locks our debt was slain—how often shall we pay again?

The Two Sisters

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER I.

AFTER purchasing her pink waist and "evening hat," Caryl walked homewards thoughtfully, her mind filled with the problem of explaining to Julia her absence for the evening. When she reached her room she deposited her parcel on the bed, and stood for a moment irresolute. Then, turning abruptly, she went downstairs and out-of-doors again. She would get a disagreeable thing over at once so that she could enjoy her evening. She must put matters so that there should be no quarrel tonight or after any future meetings with Hadley. If, as she hoped, he should ask for future meetings. She would go to Baird's now and tell Julia something that would sound plausible.

By the time she reached Baird's she had decided upon that "something." She told herself that she was sorry to have to be a little untruthful, but if her sister was so exacting she could not expect anyone to be entirely frank with her. Moreover, was it not the duty of the younger girl to prevent the elder one from worrying? Was it not better to make Julia comfortable in her mind than to have her anxious and unhappy? Caryl Marvin's sophistry worked so well upon her conscience that she actually felt a glow of self-righteousness at the idea of sacrificing her own ideas of truth to keep her sister calm and care-free.

"She'll be back soon, for she never stays long," Laura McDaugh informed her. "I think it's foolish not to take every inch of time that's allowed you. But your sister don't look at it that way."

"I know," agreed Caryl. "It's a pity she takes things so seriously."

"It sure is!" affirmed Minnie Malbrunn, who had drawn near during the conversation, "for she's so pretty she might have lots of fun. There was a swell-looking guy that came here to talk to her, but I declare she looked as if she wished he was out of the way. I knew by the cut of his jib that he was some class. She looked peeved when I asked her about him, so I let the matter drop. But,"—with a knowing wink—"I noticed all right that when she started to walk home in that rain he was waitin' with a cab for her."

Caryl controlled the intense interest that she felt at these revelations, and spoke indifferently.

"Yes," she said, "I was glad he brought her home, for if he hadn't she would have got soaked—as I did, by the way. But are you sure that the man who was talking to her here at the counter was the same one that took her home?"

"Sure I am!" averred Minnie. "He's rather tall."

Caryl recalled with some amusement that as Delaine, Somerdyke and Hadley were all tall, this description did not distinguish one from the other. But she knew without further questioning who Julia's cavalier had been. The knowledge determined her as to her own course.

Julia's appearance at this juncture interrupted the conversation, and, with a nod of good-by to the two salesgirls, Caryl drew her sister to one end of the counter.

"I want to talk to you for a minute, Judy," she said quickly. "I have accepted an invitation for dinner and the theatre tonight, and, as I will be gone when you get home, I came all the way down here to explain the matter to you."

"Going to dinner and the theatre!" exclaimed Julia. "Not—not—with that Mr. Somerdyke—are you, dear?"

Caryl tossed her head. "Indeed no!" she exclaimed. "I'm done with him!"

"I am glad," said her sister. "I might have known you would do the right thing. But"—looking anxious—"who is the person with whom you are going?"

Caryl had her story all ready, but she prefaced it with a little sigh.

"I wish you would try to trust me, Judy," she regretted. "Haven't I proved to you that I know when a man is not just the right kind? But, as you won't trust me, I will assure you that I am going to be in good hands this evening, and that I will get back safe and sound after the theatre—unless my friends want to take me to supper afterward. Then I will, of course, be later in getting in."

"Your friends!" Julia questioned. "What friends?"

Again Caryl sighed with elaborate patience. "Well, there's a very nice gentleman that I met through one of Mr. Delaine's callers—a person anybody could trust—and he and his sister are going to the theatre together tonight."

Julia smiled with relief. "His sister, too!" she said. "And they have asked you to go with them? How nice! Always supposing"—hesitatingly—"that the sister is a refined person—as I suppose she is—isn't she?"

Caryl flushed with annoyance. "I should hardly suppose," she reminded her, "that any of Mr. Delaine's friends would introduce me to men whose sisters were not refined and nice!" Then, as this argument did not seem to move Julia to a reply, the younger girl played her last card.

"Really, Judy," she said in a low voice, "if Mr. Delaine is the kind of person you would receive flowers from, and that you would make appointments with at your place of business, and that you would ride alone with in cabs—if, I say, he is the kind that you can be seen with until people talk about it—I should think you would believe that anyone I would meet through a friend of his must be respectable! Don't you think so now, yourself?"

Julia Marvin's face was suffused with a sudden wave of color, which, retreating, left her very pale. She started to speak, but Caryl interrupted her by a light laugh.

"That's all right, Judy dear!" she exclaimed, patting her sister's cheek playfully. "No explanations are necessary. We all do that kind of thing, you see—that is, all of us who get the chance! So long! Don't lie awake for me—but go to bed and get your beauty sleep—for you are pale today. I'll be to somewhere around midnight!"

And with a wave of the hand and another gay laugh Caryl Marvin hurried away.

First White Man in Philippines

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY

IT was 393 years ago that the great Magellan discovered the "Gem of the Southern Seas"—the Philippines.

Hurt by the narrowness and ingratitude of the King of Portugal, whose subject he was, Magellan turned to the King of Spain, by whom he was sent out on the epoch-making voyage.

Starting from Spain in August, 1519, in November of the following year Magellan negotiated the strait that has ever since borne his name, and crossing the mighty Pacific sighted the Philippines in March, 1521. He landed upon the little island of Mactan, off the coast of Zebu, where in a hand-to-hand encounter with the natives he was killed, April 27.

The great navigator was dead, but his good ship, the "Victoria," in September, 1522, three years from the time she set out on her memorable voyage, reached Spain and passed into immortality as the first vessel to circumnavigate the globe.

Twenty-two years after Magellan landed on the island of Mactan, five ships with three hundred men sailed from Mexico with the intent of settling the islands, but nothing came of it. Twenty-three years later a settlement was made at San Miguel, on the island of Zebu, and in 1570 Manila was founded and made the capital.

It would have been well for Spain had she never bothered herself about Magellan's discovery. The Philippines were never a source of revenue to her, and the trouble that they made for her was immense—to say nothing of the deep humiliation they brought her to in the Spanish-American War. Than the Spaniard there is no haughtier man on all the earth, and deep and bitter was the chagrin he felt on that April day of the year 1898, when he read the proclamation announcing the passing of the islands into the hands of the United States.

The Philippine Archipelago contains some 3,100 islands, with an aggregate area of 127,000 square miles. Luzon, the largest of the group, is about the size of the State of New York, and Mindanao of Indiana. The population of the archipelago is about

Are You Brusque or Irritable?

If So, Try to Cultivate Amiability, Poise, Courtesy, and an Agreeable Manner in Dealing with Your Fellow Men

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1914, by Star Company

ON a certain trolley line there is a young conductor who probably is just beginning his duties.

He is in his early twenties at most; he has a bright, boyish face and a very alert, businesslike manner.

He seems to be in perfect health and is quite conscious of the importance of his position.

But there is one thing of which he is not conscious. That is THE IMPORTANCE OF COURTESY AND POLITENESS toward the patrons of the road. Not that this young conductor has been guilty of gross impoliteness. He has simply been too brusque, too dictatorial, too "American" in his methods, to make him stand in his position as an admirable example of ambitious young manhood forging his way to the top.

Three ladies were boarding the car with all possible speed, two with many parcels and one with a suit case, when this young conductor called out brusquely, "Step lively! Step lively!" And the words were accompanied with an aggressive pull at the starting strap which almost pitched one lady backward.

It is sometimes necessary for passengers who are standing on the platform of cars, and blocking the passageway while they bid adieu to friends on the street, to be reprimanded by a request to "Step lively!" But these three ladies were hurrying and using more speed than grace in their effort to enter the car.

Therefore the young conductor's advice was superfluous and impolite. One lady wished to leave the car at a certain street. It was moving with great speed, and she arose two streets ahead to make sure of getting to the door and making her exit.

"Please stop at ——," she said. The young conductor gave her a look of scorn. "Sit down," he commanded in a most dictatorial tone. "That's two blocks away."

But before he finished speaking the car had reached her street. The lady wanted to tell him to learn the great art of courtesy, but she had not time; so, instead, she smiled at him, and he smiled most amiably in return and helped her with her suit case to descend to the street.

Which proved the young man to be really amiable at heart and his brusque manner only a surface habit. These words are written, hoping he may chance to see them and remember them, and recognize himself.

Every thinking man and woman knows how hard and nerve wracking is the work of a trolley conductor on the crowded lines of a great metropolis. When we consider how unpleasant it is to be a passenger on one of these cars at rush hours we have only to exert the imagination a little to realize what it must be to remain on that car hour after hour; to avoid collisions with motor cars and trucks and pedestrians; to stop and start at every corner at the exact spot and moment to please a vast army of travelers and shoppers and business people, and to be subjected to all the ten thousand annoyances which crowds of human being generate.

When an elderly conductor is crotchety and brusque one feels sympathy for him, knowing the trying causes which have led to his state of mind; but when a youth sets forth upon this vocation it seems a misfortune for him to begin his work in this state of nervous tension and needless irritability with unoffending passengers.

In any position which necessitates being thrown with thousands of one's fellow-men of all classes good nature and courtesy are rare assets. They are factors in future success. They lead to promotion and growth. They conserve one's forces.

Nothing wastes and dissipates our energies more than the habit of being easily irritated over small matters.

One of the most important resolves any young man can make when he sets out in any vocation in life is to cultivate amiability and poise in his dealings with his fellows. And to add courtesy and an agreeable manner.

He will be astonished as he cultivates these qualities to see how many of the worrisome happenings of daily life disappear before a smile and how many troubles vanish when met with poise and equanimity.

Every street car conductor needs to realize that to greater or less degree he is influencing the feelings of every person who boards his car.

A nervous, tired and despondent passenger can be made still more nervous by a disagreeable and brusque conductor, and can be made correspondingly less nervous and irritable by a gracious and kindly presence in the person of the conductor.

Each one of us sends forth vibrations through every waking moment. And those vibrations are influencing everyone who comes in our vicinity. Whether they are good or bad, peaceful or warlike, restful or irritating, depends on our state of mind.

Smile a little, smile a little as you pass along;
Not alone when life is pleasant, but when things go wrong.
Do not make the way seem harder by a sullen face,
Smile a little, smile a little; bright-en up the place.

Success and Failure

By ELBERT HUBBARD

WITHOUT a knowledge of the Law of Average, the insurance companies would be unable to do business. By it they eliminate chance, for chance applies only to small numbers.

Once understand the working principle of things and there is no uncertainty. The rest is mere detail.

Business in the United States is not an uncertain proposition, taken as a whole.

When you hear somebody say that ninety-five men out of a hundred fail in business, put it down on a par with one of those ancient bromides about nine men out of ten in a big city eventually filling drunkards' graves. It is hookworm talk.

FAILURE IS THE EXCEPTION.

Men may die, but very, very seldom do they join the down-and-out club.

Failure, like disease, always sends warnings; it rings the bell and blows its whistle.

And most men, everywhere, are able to side-step, hedge, counter, duck, climb the fence, raise an umbrella, and escape the grim monster of defeat.

Business is an eternal readjustment to new conditions—always of course, granting the datum that life is a dangerous business and that none of us get out of it alive.

But death and failure are not synonymous. Death is as natural as life, and for all we know, just as good. Thomas Carlyle said it was better, but he spoke while yet alive.

The only people who fail are those who take a sedative and go to sleep on the track when they see trouble coming.

Success, of course, is a comparative proposition. There is no such thing as an absolute success. Neither should there be absolute failure. Walking is simply a falling forward and a continual recovery. So business men, every day, make mistakes—but they profit by them.

We grow through our errors, for only by trying do we discover the futility of things.

Last year, in America, there were over twelve thousand failures. These failures came along at the rate of two hundred and eighty to three hundred twenty a week.

Look at the official statistics and you will be amazed to see, for ten years or more, the evenness with which the thing runs.

So there you get it; twelve thousand firms go into bankruptcy every year.

But just remember that where twelve thousand firms go into bankruptcy THERE ARE TWO MILLION BUSINESS CONCERNS THAT DON'T.

Also, note this, that of all banks rupts ninety per cent. are men employing a capital of less than five thousand dollars. Of the twelve thousand failures in 1913 only two hundred and twenty-nine had liabilities of over one hundred thousand dollars.

Failures can be traced to definite causes; and almost without exception moral bankruptcy precedes the financial smash.

And while we all fail in certain things every day, the man who fails absolutely is a very rare proposition, with something peculiarly abnormal in his constitution. The Law of Average will show that most of our acts and decisions are right and proper and altogether worthy.

Mentally, the failure is a defective, physically a wreck and morally a degenerate.

Really, take us as we run, we are not such a bad lot, after all!

The number of failures seems large, because news usually means bad news. Success and good news are not so often proclaimed from the housetops. The happy, efficient, successful people go quietly about their business, and these are in the vast majority.

Failure is the rare exception. Man was made for success. He who has nobly and patiently worked at a worthy task has already succeeded.

And even omnipotence can not make the past never to have been. The past is ours and death cannot rob us of it.

It is good to live!
